FORMER Falklands jockeys Keith Whitney and Stan Smith (right) made a special trip to the Falkland Islands for this year's 100th anniversary of the Stanley Sports Association Race meeting, in order to receive a special commemorative medal for Governor's Cup winners courtesy of Falklands race commentator Patrick Watts MBE.

Sadly the race meeting was cancelled due to the racecourse made unsafe through excessive rain, however, Mr Whitney and Mr Smith were able to enjoy a dance held in the race course bar on December 27. The SSA are to meet shortly to discuss when to hold the 100th anniversary meeting.

Phyl rewarded for services to Falkland Islands interests

THE only Falkland Islander to figure in this year's New Year's Honours List was recently retired Director of Mineral Resources, Phyllis Mary Rendell, who was awarded an OBE for, "services to Falkland Islands interests."

A pupil at Darwin Boarding School during her early school years, Mrs Rendell completed her education at boarding school in Derbyshire and Goldsmith's College, London. Born Phyllis Oliver, her father, Mr John Oliver, was recruited by the Falkland Islands Government to run a proposed model farm at what is now Brookfield and later became the FIC's manager at North Arm.

After qualifying as a teacher in England, Mrs Rendell returned to the Falklands to work in Stanley schools in the early seventies, also helping out at Darwin Boarding School for a brief period. Having met and married Mike Rendell, who was a member of Naval Party 8901, the Royal Marine detachment at Moody Brook, Mrs Rendell left the Islands with him to teach in the UK and the Middle East.

Very soon after the liberation of the Islands from Argentine occupation in 1982, the Rendells returned to the Islands where Phyllis resumed her career in the government service, first as a teacher, then in 1984 as Director of the Camp Education Department and finally, a few years later in 1988, becoming Director of Education.

It was while still Director of Education that Mrs Rendell began to be involved with oil exploration. The first time was in 1995 as a representative from the Islands in meetings held in Buenos Aires between the Argentine and British governments to discuss procedures for the establishment of a joint area for hydrocarbon explorations, then later in London, in 1996, in meetings between FIG and oil industry representatives interested in exploration in Falklands waters.

Later that same year, having proved her abilities as a negotiator on the Islands' behalf and with her interest in oil exploration whetted, when the need for a Director of Oil arose, Mrs Rendell rose to the challenge. She continued in that position, later renamed Director of Mineral Resources and including five years when she was also Director of Agriculture, until retirement last year. In this capacity she has gained the respect of the oil industry and ably overseen the first stages of the development of what seems set to become a major revenue source for the Falklands.

Speaking to Penguin News about the award, Mrs Rendell said that it was unexpected and, "a nice end to the year." While she was personally very proud to have received such an honour and wished particularly to thank those who had proposed her, she believed that it was also, "good for the public service." During thirty-two years working for the Falkland Islands Government, including being head of three different departments, she had worked with, "a fantastic team of people," who also deserved credit for the significant changes achieved.

Despite retiring from government service, Mrs Rendell has not given up the service to this community for which she has been so justly rewarded. A long-serving Justice of the Peace, she was recently appointed to the new role of Complaints Commissioner.

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

IT is sometimes difficult at this time of year to know whether one should be looking backwards or forwards. Media reviews of the year abound, because they allow the relatively painless recycling of already available material at a time when those responsible may not yet be feeling fully-recovered from the traditional excesses of the festive period.

However, the review process involves selection and can be subject to bias. Thanks to the success of the London Olympics, for example, one could believe that throughout 2012, Britain was riding high on a wave of general success, unaffected by the prevailing economic gloom, or the taint of various scandals which have been revealed during the last twelve months.

Something similar may have happened here in the Falklands. Probably the largest and most sustained invasion by the world's media that this much interviewed and filmed community has ever seen happened in 2012, thanks to it being the 30th Anniversary of the Falklands War and to the occasionally bizarre antics and declarations of Argentina's President.

Unlike in 1982, we were ready for this invasion which offered a priceless public relations opportunity. Beginning in February with the deployment of Prince William, the good news stories, including the sensitive commemorations, the visit of the Duke of Kent and the SAMA veterans' pilgrimages, continued right until Christmas, culminating in MLA Jan Cheek's triumphant appearance on the BBC's influential Hard Talk programme.

These public relations successes may have obscured the lack of progress on other matters, which were considered urgent when they first arose. A review of our immigration regulations still has not happened, for example, despite the fact that our existing arrangements tend to exclude rather than attract the new people that every recent socio-economic survey says we shall need just to maintain the present level of services and put us at risk of losing valuable people already here.

In March, Irene Lucas's excellent report on the Review of Government was released and a timetable for the implementation of its recommendations announced. The separation of the directorships of the Health and Education Departments is in process, but if any action has been taken on her other recommendations, especially with regard to the Human Resources Department, the excess of bureaucracy and, "the fracture between the political and managerial leadership" it has been done very quietly.

Argentina: Still ignoring the lessons of the past

ON Thursday, the President of Argentina, Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner published a letter in the UK newspaper The Guardian, calling upon Prime Minister David Cameron to start negotiations over the handing over of the Falklands.

The letter was timed to mark the anniversary of when, according to the official Argentine history, on January 3, 1833 the British Navy expelled a civilian Argentine population from the Falklands and declared British rule.

This somehow ignores the historical facts, gleaned among other sources from Argentina's own National Archives, that no such expulsion of a civilian population took place.

Historians Peter Pepper and Graham Pascoe tell us that on January 2, 1833, the small sloop HMS Chico arrived at Port Louis to find the settlement in chaos after a small Argentine (and in British terms illegal) garrison there had mutinied and brutally murdered its commander, Captain Mestivier in front of his wife.

On January 3, the Chico's captain, John James Onslow, hauled down the Buenos Aires flag and hoisted the Union Jack.

Onslow's orders, which his report suggests he obeyed scrupulously, were not to molest any civilian inhabitants he might find in the Falklands. In fact, he went to great lengths to persuade the inhabitants, some of whom were dissatisfied with their life in the Islands, to remain so that they could continue to supply fresh meat to visiting naval ships.

Onslow ordered the recently returned Captain of an Argentine ship to remove the Argentine garrison of 26 soldiers, with their wives and children. The captain, Pinedo protested ineffectually but duly sailed in the Sarandi on January 5.

Four other civilians: a Brazilian and a Uruguayan, with their wives, are also known to have departed voluntarily, but the rest remained and their subsequent lives and deaths are documented.

Aside from the historical inaccuracy at the heart of her letter's emotional appeal, the Argentine President's reference to Britain's failure to comply with various UN resolutions to hold talks on the future of the Falklands - which would be a fruitless exercise as the Argentine Constitution allows only one unacceptable outcome - ignores her country's refusal to obey the UN Security Council's call for Argentina to withdraw its forces after its armed invasion of a small, peaceful and largely undefended country in 1982, which was to lead to the deaths of nearly 2,000 people.

Responding to the Argentine President's charge that the current status of the Falklands was colonial, MLA Dr Barry Elsbey, told The Daily Telegraph on Wednesday night: "We are not a colony - our relationship with the United Kingdom is by choice."

Farm venue for New Year's celebrations

WITH the majority of Christmas events cancelled due to torrential rain, Elaine and Arthur Turner at Rincon Grande took it upon themselves to offer a New Year's Eve barbecue and dance along with New Year's Day motorcycle games.

Elaine takes up the story: Thanks to Alan, Trish and Lucianne Henry and their seemingly never ending stock of Christmas lights the garage at Rincon was transformed with multicoloured flashing lights, Christmas decorations and Falkland Islands' bunting.

By 6pm the BBQ was sizzling in the capable hands of Alan Henry and Matthew Berntsen, producing enough food to feed the crowd of around 50 people. Party games followed including handstands and cow milking. No one was left out with each team receiving a prize - a framed photograph of my Honda 250X.

Dancing went on until the small hours and just before midnight the bonfire was lit and the marshmallows passed around; although due to the high octane of the fuel Arthur used to keep the bonfire going, a six foot long stick would have been more appropriate for toasting the marshmallows rather than the 12-inch ones I handed around.

It was back into the garage to count down to the New Year and witness a fantastic performance from shearer Euan Mackinnon on the bagpipes.

Around 2pm the KTM bike team took revenge upon my constant 'Honda' praising (in Elaine's Penguin News online column), and with some manhandling from Sean and Jay Moffatt, I obtained a permanent marker tattoo on my back which read 'I Love KTM'. If that were not enough New Year's Day dawned for us to discover the letters 'KTM' stencilled onto three of my pet sheep.

After a large cooked breakfast it was onto the bikes and down to the Cow Paddock for some fun events. There were 13 riders split into two teams: Team Rincon was captained by Adam Dickson and included Sean Moffatt, myself, Robert Ferguson, Nathan Gemill and Jimmy Moffatt. Team Grande captained by James Tyrrell included Jay Moffatt, Gary Tyrrell, Arthur Turner, Scott Henry Roberts and leaun and Daniel Ford.

The first event was a relay race where physical contact had to be made between the riders on change-over; Team Grande won this event. Another relay race followed during which a pair of goggles had to be passed between the riders on change-over; and thanks to Adam Dickson laying his bike down on change-over, Team Rincon won this event.

The latter team dominated the rest of the events with Sean Moffatt scoring the only goal in Motorbike Football, winning musical chairs and the drag race and Robert Ferguson winning the Wheelie Competition. There were only two injuries on the day with a collision between father and son (Jay) in the football, and Scott Henry Roberts having to push his borrowed Suzuki 250 off the course during the wheelie competition.

Arthur and I would like to thank everyone who came out and made New Year's Eve and day so much fun.

Camp roads designation

EXECUTIVE Council has approved recommendations that the Attorney General's Chambers draft legislation to extend designation to all rural roads, and make amendments to deal with issues relating to settlement roads, insurance, vehicle licenses, road crossing and any incidental matters.

Designation will relate to roads that have been constructed and maintained at public expense and over which the public has a right of way. According to the paper, it is not necessary for the Crown to own all the land over which a road passes for the road to be a public highway.

Farm vehicles that need to cross and travel short distances on those roads in order to travel to locations on a farm will need insurance, and Caribbean Alliance Insurance Company Limited has agreed to offer limited cover at manageable rates.

Farm vehicles that are only for farm use and that will not be used for travel on the road network will be exempt from the requirement to have a valid Vehicle Licence 'for the purpose of crossing the road and travelling short distances on the public highway in order to reach locations on a farm.'

The paper explains that vehicles can be licensed by month so if there was a need to licence a vehicle to travel on the designated road it could be done at relatively low cost. For example to license an HGV for one month would cost £18.

Regarding children driving vehicles across roads, an alternative option was suggested that signed crossing points be established with appropriate warning signs within or close to settlements that children can use. The paper notes, 'If Members still wish children to be exempt when crossing designated roads then suitable wording will be included in draft legislation.'

Signs will be in place before the start date for application of the ordinance to all public highways. This will take around 31 weeks.

Noise nuisance

AT the Police Committee Meeting in December The Attorney General introduced his draft report giving options on how noise nuisance issues could be dealt with. The Committee agreed legislation should deal with all types of nuisance which might have a detrimental effect on quality of life and that it was for the Planning and Environmental Department to progress how nuisance issues could be addressed in the widest terms by the civil enforcement route through their committees.

Driving hours

THE Attorney General's Chambers and the RFIP are working towards the inclusion of legislation within the Road Traffic Ordinance which will restrict the number of permitted driving hours covering heavy goods and PSV drivers.

It was noted at a recent meeting of the Police Committee, however, that it would be difficult to place restrictions on part-time taxi drivers who had additional full time employment.

Theo and Lane are 'credit to the school'

THE first winner of the Constables' Cup, an award for the pupil of the Infant and Junior School who, "has undertaken or endeavoured to help others before themselves," was Theo Duncan.

Theo received his award on the last day of the school term, along with runner-up, Lane McKay. Both were said by Constable Ford, "to have shown a maturity beyond their years and to have been a credit to the school."

Anyone in the community can nominate a pupil at the Infant and Junior School for the cup, which will be awarded on a termly basis.

MPC turbines

CHIEF Executive, Keith Padgett, Commander British Forces, Brigadier Bill Aldridge and Paul Wilson from the Defence Infrastructure Organisation signed a Memorandum Of Understanding (MOU) in December for the construction of a new wind farm at Mare Harbour. The FIG-owned wind farm will provide renewable energy to MPC thus reducing its reliance on fossil fuels. The electrical power generated by the three turbines will then be sold on to MPC.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

THE Joint Ministerial Council ran for a day and a half but related events and opportunities for other meetings filled most of the time away. I attended two as second oil MLA. The first was an event for representatives of some investors in our oil industry. Over 100 hundred people attended and excellent factual presentations were given by Stephen Luxton, representatives from the FCO and from British Geological Survey and others including the Honourable Dick Sawle and representative from two of the oil companies. There was also an informative meeting at the FCO with oil company representatives. This was followed by a business forum for all the OTs

We met Hugo Swire MP who replaced Jeremy Browne as our Minister: he is also the son-in-law of John Nott so is exceptionally well informed about the Islands and gave the usual firm reassurances

We had a brief visit to the expanded Falklands Department where we met some enthusiastic and hardworking people. It was easy in the fairly distant past to question the engagement of the FCO in our problems with our irritating neighbour, but that is not the case now. We took several opportunities to express our appreciation of the unequivocal support we receive.

The UK Overseas Territories Association met in the morning of 5 December before the first sessions of the Joint Ministerial Council to discuss some of the items scheduled for the JMC. It was also an opportunity to discuss the structure of UKOTA and to welcome back Gibraltar and Turks and Caicos who were absent for some time for different reasons.

There is a detailed communiqué on the FCO website from the JMC which summarises the work done in the various sessions which were chaired by Mark Simmonds MP the Overseas Territories Minister. Other ministers attended whole or parts of other sessions as time and Parliamentary commitments permitted.

Finally we laid a wreath at the Battle Day ceremony at the Cenotaph and went on to the Falklands Association AGM and lunch. This group has worked for us for years, in bad times and good and deserve our thanks.

Invasion so stupid

IF anything is to be learned from the release by the British National Archives of government papers from 1982 under the thirty year rule, it is what a colossal mistake the Argentine invasion of the Falklands was from the point of view of their sovereignty claim.

The transcript of the evidence to the Falkland Islands Review Committee, chaired by Lord Franks, given by the former Foreign Minister, Lord Carrington and Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher which has been released for the first time, indicates beyond doubt that the Argentine invasion in 1982 came as a complete surprise to them both.

That this was the case may not have been because of a lack of evidence of what the Argentines were contemplating, but rather because the idea seemed so preposterous that such evidence as was available from the British Ambassador in Buenos Aires and the Captain of HMS Endurance amongst others, was not taken seriously. As the Prime Minister put it, "I never, never expected the Argentines to invade the Falklands head-on. It was such a stupid thing to do, as events happened, such a stupid thing even to contemplate doing"

The released papers from the UK's archives indicate the extent to which Argentine intransigence damaged their own ambitions. It seems clear that even if after invading they had agreed to withdraw their forces, the British Government, by no means certain that the Islands could be retaken and under pressure from the USA to avoid an armed response, would have been willing to contemplate some negotiated settlement.

According to the Guardian newspaper last week, less than two weeks after the Argentinian invasion on April 2, 1982, with the Task Force already at sea, Mrs Thatcher described a "diplomatic solution," as being, "a considerable prize."

In one paper, stamped 'Top Secret', Mrs Thatcher is recorded as saying that under the plan being discussed by the US and at the UN, "the withdrawal of Argentine forces would have been secured without military action. Argentina would gain representation on the interim commission and on the local councils; and a commitment to negotiations to decide the definitive status of the islands by the end of the year, although without any commitment to a transfer of sovereignty." She added: "Repugnant as it was that the aggressor should gain anything from his aggression, this seemed an acceptable price to pay."

A folksinger in your home

NOTTINGHAM based folk singer and song writer, Marc Block will be visiting the Islands as a Shackleton Quality of Life Scholar towards the end of this month and is keen to hear from anyone who would like him to perform for them, even in their own home.

Marc visited the Falklands first last year as a volunteer botanical field assistant with Falklands Conservation and, in his own words, "fell in love with the landscape and the relaxed pace of life in the Islands."

While in Stanley, from January 24 to February 7, Marc says that he will be doing some work in schools and performing in a variety of venues, before going on to West Falkland until February 23.

Describing his work as, "a wide and varied repertoire encompassing traditional folk, my own compositions, acoustic pop covers from the 50s, 60s and 70s, and some songs for children."

Marc writes that he very much enjoys doing house concerts, performing to a small number in an intimate setting, and would like to offer this to Islanders in addition to his other shows.

Marc is not asking any fee for this, so anyone who would like him to perform in their home can contact him via marcblockmusic@gmail.com. Further information about Marc is available on his web site: www.marcblock.co.uk

Short ExCo

AS is usual for the last Executive Council of the year, the agenda for the meeting on December 19 was short and covered only essential business such as confirming financial decisions agreed at October and November Standing Finance Committee meetings

A recommendation on the Air-bridge Pricing Structure was accepted which will result in a reduction of around £10 in the resident fare to take effect for bookings made after the date of the meeting.

Various other proposals were agreed including one for an upgrade to FM Radio, a period of consultation on the proposed designation of roads to commence in the New Year, the next steps in the introduction of fixed penalties for certain road traffic offences and a number of recommendations relating to the setting up of a port authority.

Some interim staffing arrangements were approved, mainly in recognition of additional workloads and another paper approved concerning resources for Regulatory Services which have a heavy statutory workload for aviation alone, without all their other tasks. Finally, an appointment to the Retirement Pensions Board was approved.

Buzzing messages of love, support and friendship in a digital age

AS I write this, on the morning of New Year's Day, our London flat is filled with the gorgeously rich sounds of strings woodwinds and brass. Johan Strauss's waltzes and polkas are flowing from the TV.

Watching this annual concert from Vienna, with its images of fulsomely frocked dancers whirling through Hapsburg palaces, has become a ritual that never fails to put me in a good mood to face the imponderables of the New Year. That and – more prosaically – coffee strong enough to bend a spoon. Well, last night was rather a long one.

For decades, I never really enjoyed New Year's Eve or New Year's Day. There was too much artificial effort to be cheerful, more often than not among strangers in strange and outrageously expensive places. I ended up only with severe bouts of nostalgia. When I wanted to be near friends, the vast majority of them were hundreds, if not thousands, of miles away. But the world is a much smaller place now. Last night I was at home with just a few friends as Big Ben chimed and the Mayor launched a display that showed Sydney, Shanghai and New York how to do fireworks. Almost immediately, my phone began buzzing, beeping and chirping. The messages of love and friendship came in as texts, Facebook messages, Tweets, emails and Skype calls.

One lovely friend was alone in Australia and she said she was homesick for the UK. Immediately, half a dozen other friends contacted her to remind her that soon she would be back with her family, and in the meantime, they – her friends – were just a chirp, beep or buzz away. One can mock the occasional shallowness of instant digital communications, but not the warmth of friendship and love that sometimes drives us to use them.

Traditional communications also come to the fore at the end of the year. Good old-fashioned newspapers drool over files that have been released from the government archive after 30 years or more safely hidden from the public gaze.

While I knew, of course, that 2012 was the 30th anniversary year of the Falklands War, I was still surprised to see the headlines full of details from hitherto secret documents about the Islands' crisis.

In truth, the files did not tell us much we did not know about that drama. The Times had interesting details of the originally coded diplomatic signals to and from Rex Hunt's Government House and to and from the Embassy in Buenos Aires in the run-up to invasion. They did not change my perception of what was going on behind closed doors much, but they did confirm the remarkable ignorance about the Falklands situation that existed in London. In one telegram, the Falklands Governor was told that he had London's permission to blow up Stanley Airport if he would like to do so. It was rather like an off-hand official approval for HE's entertainment budget: "Approval is given for an extra case of Beef-eater gin."

There was interesting documentary evidence too of the fraught communications that had passed between Paris and London. Paris was told that if they did not stop the supply of weapons to Argentina tout de suite the entente would become a hell of a lot less cordial.

I was struck that amid this volume of front page Falklands reportage and the associated analysis and comment on the inner pages, there was no mention at all of the Falklands situation today, the continuing efforts to blockade the Islands (which are actually more aggressive than in the months leading up to the 1982 invasion) and about the degree of effort that the British Government is quietly putting into controlling Argentine aggression. It occurred to me that the Falklands do have an interesting place in the British psyche, but it is no more than as an historical symbol; proud evidence that Britain is still a nation that matters in the world. If the Falklands crops up at all in normal British conversation, it is to prove that although the British lion may appear to be slumbering, woe betide anyone who tweaks its tail. The Falklands are most certainly not a living issue for Brits.

Which brings me to looking ahead at 2013. For the Falklands it will bring real international challenges. My view is that some strong support from London has kept the lid on another crisis, and that will continue. Naming a large chunk of disputed Antarctic territory after The Queen was no mere gesture to HRH. It was a message to Buenos Aires. Successful British pressure on cruise companies to boycott Argentina rather than the Falklands in response to harassment of shipping operations in Buenos Aires, has presented a message which amounts to, "We will not be cowed by your aggressive attitude, we are not sanguine and we still continue to support the Islanders, regardless of your efforts to hurt them. Do not ignore this."

But, again, it's worth noting that the British public and the media are not aware of this and the topic does not interest them. So if Argentina was to call Britain's bluff and escalate its crude nationalism, perhaps by cutting off the air link with Chile, then there would be profound surprise here, just as there was in 1982. And after a decade of often painful foreign interventions and tough times at home, the appetite to confront such troublesome overseas issues might be very limited.

My guess is that Cristina Kirchner will be less of a threat in 2013, as she will be fully occupied with mere political survival. She is now so unpopular that it is at least conceivable that her government will fall amid economic chaos. I do not think such a crisis will encourage her to use the "Malvinas" issue as a populist diversion. I think she has genuine religion about the Falklands, and her passion to fly her flag there is heartfelt. Domestic trouble or not, she may recognise that aggression has not worked, and therefore re-tune her policy to something that is more cerebral and perhaps more effective. But I have to admit that there will still be a risk that, as a cornered and desperate politician, she may lash out irrationally.

I will stick my neck out, though, and say that a combination of strong, if quiet, British foreign policy aimed at BA, and domestic preoccupations in Argentina will conspire to keep the Falklands safe and stable enough to ensure the investment in people and funds that are required for the next successful stage of the Islands' development and growth.

Certainly I am not worried, and very soon I expect to show that by digging holes for the foundations of a little house in the Camp. That is indeed a pleasant prediction.

Happy New Year!

Ross Jones

1. What is your most prized possession?

Sad, but true... it is my iPad.

2. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea/tot with?

David Attenborough. I met him once and was completely star struck, so a tot would ease the nerves. He inspired me to study zoology and brought the natural world to our living rooms.

3. If you had a motto, what would it be?

Hindsight is a waste of time.

4. What is your most embarrassing (or happiest, you choose) moment?

In Australia our tent got broken into while we slept by a kangaroo and a possum... they were stealing our food! I chased them out and wrestled a sweet potato from the kangaroo before I realised I was stark naked.

5. What in your everyday life drives you crazy?

Anything sticky; lolly sticks, oranges, jam, children with any of the above.

6. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be?

There are lots of amazing places in the Falklands I have yet to see. Saunders Island is probably my favourite place in the world! I would love to visit Steeple Jason or Beauchene.

7. What would people be surprised to learn about you?

I held the world record for swimming through a yard and a half of treacle in 34 seconds. I was beat in 1996 by a female Ukrainian shot-putter. Not really.

8. What's the best book or movie you have read/watched recently?

I've just read 'The 100 year old man who climbed out of the window and disappeared.' It's a quirky, funny and fascinating modern history of the world!

9. What is the one, single food that you would never give up?

If I had to choose just one it would be cheese. It would be a very sad world without it.

10. What is your happiest childhood memory?

Long summers on the beach, rock-pooling, snorkelling and discovering new coves.

Ross first came to the Falklands 10 years ago, pretty much fresh from university. He loved the place and hoped that one day he would would come back. Then in November he got a job as a Fisheries Observer and moved down from Cornwall. It is the first time here for Ross' wife Zoe, and three children Oliver, Rosie-May and Jack. They live on Ross Road and never tire of the view.

West Falkland Ram and Fleece Show, 2012 by Nigel Knight

THE 26th Ram and Fleece Show dawned on December 29, 2012, under overcast and dull skies and an unusual easterly wind. This very unseasonal weather fortunately did not deter most of the residents and visitors to Fox Bay Village, who were once again anticipating a good day out and were not to be disappointed.

Because of the road conditions however, some visitors were unable to either bring entries or make it themselves to the show.

Keith, Justin and Jamie along with Lisa Pole-Evans had already been working hard transforming the wool shed prior to the event. In the morning Keith, ably assisted by Susan and Tony were there to take entries. Jo and Matt Tanner also flew out from town to assist. Some of the fleeces had already arrived by FIGAS, but all rams and most fleeces were delivered on the day. As usual they started as a trickle but it soon became quite hectic as the deadline for entries approached.

Once the entries were all in, Paul Robertson and Bill Pole-Evans set about the daunting and onerous task of selecting the fleeces having the highest estimated commercial value. Once this had been accomplished next was to select, from all the rams that were entered in the four ram classes, the one they considered to be the Champion Ram and Reserve Champion. Finally they selected the Best Dual Purpose Ram (Wool/Meat) along with the runner up as well as third place. They were assisted in this task by having all the rams bodyweights and fleece weights recorded on entry to the Show.

A total of 53 fleeces from nine farms and 24 rams from five different farms were exhibited at this year's event. All the entries had been carefully selected from tens of thousands of fleeces and hundreds of rams; every one a credit to its owner.

By now the barbecue, which had already been set up by Tex and Rhian using their gas fired barbecue pits and this year in the capable hands of Justin, Harold, Keith A and Tex, was in full swing. This fortified all those intended judging the three classes of rams and the three classes of fleeces, as well as the additional competitions which now awaited them back at the wool shed. Once this task had been achieved the time consuming job of counting up the judging slips took place, before the final results were known. These were all then competently collated by Ian. The sheep used in the fleece weight competition was then skilfully shorn by Paul Phillips and both the fleece and the sheep were then weighed. This enabled the winners in these other competitions to be finalised. The fleece weight, sheep weight and micron guess competition produced some very accurate results. It was also very satisfying to see a good number of entries in the Under 21's Sheep Judging Competition, this year there were five entries. Tony Hirtle had already produced the master judging sheets to enable the results from this competition to be worked out.

Promptly at 5.30pm, a good crowd assembled in the wool shed for the prize giving. This year's prizes were once again presented by HE The Governor who had flown out from Town to the West especially for the event. Special thanks to Captain Clarke and the FIGAS staff back in town for making this possible.

The prize-giving brought this year's show to a close, after which the focus of attention moved back again to the Social Club for more socialising until late that night. The cooks fired up the BBQ again and did an excellent job feeding many hungry participants.

As usual the Southern Cross Social Club Committee did an excellent job of quenching the thirst of the visitors at the bar. This brought to an end another successful Ram and Fleece Show.

Invitation To Tender - Radar Site Decommissioning, Goose Green, Falkland Islands

The British Antarctic Survey (BAS), Natural Environment Research Council, wishes to remove radar masts and associated infrastructure from a paddock on the edge of the Goose Green settlement by 31 May 2013. This is to comply with Falkland Islands Government planning permission 56/09/P which requires that "the radar array and supports, ISO containers and all other structures and equipment, together with all foundations shall be removed by 31 May 2013 and the site restored to its original condition prior to development".

BAS invites expressions of interests from suitably experienced contractors to decommission this equipment and related infrastructure, and to restore the site to its original condition.

To receive the Statement of Requirement and Tender documents, interested parties should contact Steve Lucas, RCUK Procurement Specialist: sjl@bas.ac.uk

The closing date for receipt of Tenders will be Friday 1st February 2013 16.30 UK time

Tony's apology to C&W

IT has been pointed out to me in several of Stanley's stores and bars and on a colourful variety of street corners, beaches and car parks that there are a couple of rather outstanding errors in my Falklands 2013 calendar.

Unfortunately, I must firstly confirm that there really are only 28 days (and 4 weekends) in the forthcoming February and not 30 as printed!

Also I must apologise profusely to my sponsors for misspelling their name on the front cover.

As the public will know, Cable and Wireless South Atlantic Ltd have generously supported the Falklands Calendar for several years now. They have never interfered with the content and have proved to be as good and supportive a sponsor as anyone could wish for, just as they have been in many other fields of Falklandic endeavour.

The Falklands Calendar has, rather unintentionally it must be said, become something of a national institution since it was first produced in 1984. For each of the 30 years since I have tried, I hope successfully, to improve the standard of both the photographs and content in order to provide a simple, useful, entertaining and inexpensive way of keeping in touch annually with friends and family overseas.

However, just as the content, photographs and design are entirely mine, so is the responsibility for any mistakes which have crept in.

Therefore I would like to both publicly and personally apologise to Cable and Wireless South Atlantic Ltd, and Sara Loftus in particular, for any embarrassment these errors may have caused.

I would also like to take this opportunity to thank the public for their continuing support. I hope to continue to produce the Falklands Calendar for many years to come and promise, in future, to engage the services of a suitably able proofreader!

Tony Chater, Stanley

Concern over Centre

WE WERE interested recently to read an announcement that the Lighthouse Seamen's Centre will be closed to the public throughout January and, we surmise the future is open to uncertainty.

While difficult from afar to appreciate the current staffing and funding situation that may have brought this on, we are concerned on a number of levels.

The Mission was instigated by Kirsten and myself approximately 17 years ago to offer support to seafarers working the waters around the Falkland Islands.

In those early days we received instant support from the FI public as well as Fishing Companies and of course FIG who recognised the contribution made by the industry to the general economy.

The day to day running of the Mission was funded to a greater part by the people of the Islands who felt very much a part of the action by using the mission for meals, coffee, or just a general chat. What better way for people to feel linked to an industry that has given so much to the Islands over these past decades?

The seafarers themselves expressed gratitude that they could have contact with the people of the Islands in such a relaxed and natural way. I remember fondly the healthy way many of the seamen interacted with the general public. We recognise that many of these are family men desperate to return to their loved ones. A few moments of 'normality' is what keeps them going.

If this access is closed to the public, I fear support for the mission will begin to waver, the interaction with the seafarers will cease, and both the seafarers and the public themselves will miss out on this positive aspect of the work.

I know from talking to fishing executives, agents, and ship captains that they understand and support the humanitarian role the Mission has to play. They also recognise other positive benefits arising from the Seamen's Centre. A happy crew is a productive crew. So even if from a purely financial point of view, the Centre makes a valuable contribution to the industry. This is recognised by the welcome support given by the fishing companies over the years.

The facility was initially financed by FIDC as a social investment, supporting the fishing industry and the vital role it plays in the financial and social health of the Falkland Islands. Kirsten and I always assumed we had an unwritten social contract with the people of the Islands. After all, it was their money that made it possible. This social contract naturally included the public in the day to day access of the facility.

I appreciate the difficulty in finding staff who are prepared to work below the normal standard of remuneration. The work sometimes demands long hours of dedication. I worked without pay for four years, Kirsten for minimal wages half the time. She volunteered her time for the other half.

We worked hard at setting up an on-going organisation that could sustain properly remunerated staff to take the Mission to the next level. I think the continued work over the past years shows this has been possible. Albeit with careful juggling.

Summing up: serious investment has been made over the life of the mission by three distinct but intertwined groups.

- FIG
- Fishing companies
- General public (includes support from military personnel)

Like a three legged stool, if one of these is removed, I fear it may fall over.

Kirsten and I are in another country and removed from the day to day workings so don't have the answers to this dilemma. But we know there are answers. We implore the trustees to explore all options, to talk openly and freely with FIG, the fishing companies, and the general public.

There is an obvious issue of investment here. It may be financial, social, managerial, or maybe all three. While being frustrated at not being there on the ground to help things along, we know that the Islands have a great tradition of making the impossible happen. We know you can get together, talk it out, and make it work. Too much has been invested to let it fail.

Mike and Kirsten Hughes,
New Zealand.

No massive fuel mark-up

I REFER to the letter from Bill Luxton (PN Dec 14th) re petrol prices. As has been mentioned many times over the years, the domestic fuel formula (DFF) governs the price of domestic fuel sold at the pump. After all costs have been taken into consideration, the profit margin allowed to Stanley Services is capped at 2.5%. It is therefore wrong to claim that there is a "massive mark-up" - this is simply not true. The DFF is monitored on a monthly basis and the government audits the formula annually to ensure compliance.

The fact is that the demand for petrol in the Falklands is very small in comparison to diesel. Petrol has to be shipped in from the UK and the costs of shipping hazardous fuel in small quantities is high which explains the difference between purchase price and sale price.

Diesel is supplied to our shore tanks from tankers. Due to the fact that diesel is shipped in huge quantities for use by shipping as well as domestic vehicles, the purchase price paid for diesel benefits from volume purchases and the consumer at the pump gets the benefit of these discounts.

The consumer is not being "screwed" at all. The investments that SSL make back into the Falklands are from profits generated by activities that are not covered by the DFF. The taxpayer benefits from investments made, jobs created and of course also from dividends paid to the government as well as company taxation charges.

The fact is that of the three licensed monopolies, SSL is the only one in which the public, via FIG, has a 45% ownership. The public gains considerable benefit from those arrangements. Your last paragraph would seem to indicate that you approve of this type of structure. I agree with you on that point Bill!

Keep concessions

IN May 1982 I landed in Port San Carlos as support troop commander of 11 Field Squadron Royal Engineers, relieved to get ashore from the RFA Sir Bedivere after experiencing "homb alley". My memories are of a busy anchorage with constant noise of helicopters and jets and the occasional gun fire and explosions. There was a smell of peat fires and a certain beauty to the landscape that seemed so at odds with the machinery of war.

Over the past 30 years I have often thought of my time in the Falklands as a small part of Op Corporate. I was spared direct involvement in the 'horrors of war' as the unit was in a support role, building the Harrier strip at Port San Carlos, bringing fuel ashore and assisting in battlefield clearance at Goose Green. After the surrender we moved to Stanley to re-open the runway, erect temporary hangars, build culverts, (including one made from an Exocet launcher!) and off load many tons of stores.

I understand the conditions the front line troops experienced and have always had nothing but admiration for their achievements, and the vital role played by the Navy and Air Force. I am proud to have played a minor part in the liberation of these Islands. Contact with Islanders was limited but I remember that everyone was extremely pleased to see the British Forces and assisted in any way possible; tractors and trailers helped move equipment, and copious quantities of tea appeared.

Since the conflict I follow developments in the Falklands with interest but have not returned. I have only positive memories of an exciting professionally fulfilling time here, doing a job that needed to be done.

In 2002 I attended a Royal Engineers 20 year Op Corporate Reunion in the Tower of London where someone gave me details of SAMA 1982 which I then joined. I have been a passive member, reading the newsletter with interest but not really thinking the 'pilgrimages' and organised events were for me. My wife and children accompanied me to the 25th anniversary parade in London and met some of my former colleagues.

I have often thought about returning, but not until this year with the SAMA 1982 concessionary fare scheme that allowed veterans to take two next of kin, have I seriously considered it. For me, and I suspect many other veterans, the ability to bring my wife and son to see these beautiful islands, their people and wildlife, and understand more about the conflict was the key factor in deciding to come this year. Coming on my own, or with only other veterans would have been self indulgent but bringing Lucy and Hugh (15) has been a wonderful experience for all of us.

Hopefully we have thanked everyone who has helped us as we have gone round the Islands. Following a web search, my first email was to John & Michelle Jones at Race Point Farm, Port San Carlos. Michelle responded almost immediately saying she had passed on my email to Gary Clement the FI rep of SAMA 1982.

Very quickly Gary suggested an itinerary, arranged accommodation on Pebble and Saunders Islands, and gave me contacts to book the FIGAS flights and car hire. I can't thank him enough for his assistance, encouragement and answering numerous questions on subjects from golf to fishing. Liberty Lodge is beautiful; we all feel privileged to be here over Christmas as we experience the '4 seasons in one day' Falklands weather! Ellen has made us welcome and thanks to all those who have contributed to the construction and upkeep of the Lodge. Thank you to those who donated the lamb and fresh vegetables for us to cook a Falklands Christmas dinner.

I understand the MOD has decided to continue the SAMA 1982 concessionary fare scheme in 2013, which is good news, but have decided to limit it to veterans only. That is silly. I have gained far more from coming as a family than on my own. My son Hugh will pass on an appreciation of the Islands and the sacrifices made to keep them British to a new generation. He will also spread the word about the Falklands as a brilliant holiday destination as his golden moment was riding a quad bike to a Gentoo colony!

The bridegroom wore a grey suit and red tie and was supported by best man Ian Smith. Two flower girls, Lily Lapham and Jasmine McCormick wore ivory gowns with turquoise accessories and ably performed their duties of scattering a path of rose petals for the bride and groom to walk through.

Two page boys, Kaden and Liam McCormick wore charcoal grey suits with red ties. Matron of honour Glenda McLeod and bridesmaid Leah Lang looked lovely in gowns of turquoise. The reception was held at Cahoots (formerly The Brasserie).

Floaters bob to victory

An efficient launch

THE annual Sea Cadets New Year's Day Raft Race proved as big a draw as ever, and even offered up a surprising degree of sunshine compared to the rest of the Christmas period.

In the Super Raft category The Floaters team sailed to victory with a crew of Sue Smith, Jason Whitney, Roy, Tara and Paige Jennings and Kayleigh Anderson.

Rumour has it that Sue and Jason's early years at Darwin School may have given them an advantage in the raft building stakes.

Military might came to the fore in the traditional raft category with HMS Optimistic in first place, Miss July 89 in second and HMS Bobby in third.

The first junior craft was that of the Sea Cadets with a crew of Anastasia Markina, Michaela Clifford, Laoisa Bishop-Newman, Amber Goss and Shannon Alazia.

The organisers of the race asked that their thanks be passed to the official and unofficial safety crafts including those of the Protegat, FIDF, Sullivan Shipping, the FIC and Stephen Luxton.

The Registry invites applications for casual assistance in the up-coming Referendum on 10th and 11th March 2013 for staffing the polling stations and counting votes. This will require a flexible approach to working hours and locations, a friendly, helpful attitude and a genuine desire to assist the Falkland Islands community.

Assistants may be required to undertake work on either East or West Falkland as well as in Stanley, so a current valid driving licence and a good knowledge of camp roads would be an advantage, as would previous relevant experience.

In addition, those wishing to undertake this work may request to be placed on a casual list in order that they may be contacted in the future for the provision of similar electoral services as required.

Remuneration for this will be paid at the rate of £7.89 per hour in Grade G. If you do not have Falkland Islands Status or a Permanent Residence Permit you may have to apply for a work permit.

For further information and an application form, please contact the Registrar General, Beth Reid on telephone 27269 or email registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

A MAJOR building project close to the historic centre of Stanley was approved by the Planning and Building Committee at its meeting yesterday, January 10.

The Falkland Islands Company (FIC) has plans to build 26 two bedroom apartments in the form of an 80 metre long terrace on land west of 34 Fitzroy Road and to the south of the FIC's offices and warehouses. This is the land where formerly there were a number of Portacabins housing temporary offices, which have since been removed.

The design concept for the terrace is described as a modern interpretation of the traditional 'sou'wester' dwelling seen throughout Stanley. A variety of building colours are shown on the plans.

The Committee was informed that the most likely occupants of this development would be personnel connected with the oil industry.

A recommendation for planning permission to be granted had been made by the Environmental Planning Officer (EPO), subject to standard conditions and others relating to access, drainage, parking and water supply. These would have to be complied with before occupation of the units could be allowed.

In the EPO's report to the Committee it was pointed out that the site is currently shown as part of a Policy B1 commercial area, centred on the FIC complex to the north of the site. This policy of the Stanley Town Plan seeks to encourage new shops, offices and customer services in such locations.

However, in December 2011 planning approval was granted to develop the frontage with Fitzroy Road for residential development. The scheme previously approved broadly uses the same footprint for the terrace with similar access and parking layouts but was for only 13 dwellings and did not include the proposed external amenity area.

The Committee had received a lengthy letter of objection to this development from Mr Stephen Clifton, who lives on Fitzroy Road.

Among the grounds cited by Mr Clifton for his objection were that the proposed development of two and three storey buildings was excessive in a relatively old part of the town and completely out of character of the surrounding residential area and would restrict the views of neighbours residing to the south and west.

Mr Clifton also expressed the view that the already intense traffic flow on Fitzroy Road between the junctions of Hebe Street and Philomel Street would become unbearable as the 24/7 nature of oil industry operations would create a permanent traffic flow and attendant noise pollution in the area.

He feared also that in winter the development would restrict sunlight causing the road to become permanently iced over like the section on John Street between Dean and Villiers Streets.

In answer to some of Mr Clifton's objections, the EPO stated that he believed the proposed use accorded with the predominate use of Fitzroy Road as a residential area, although the site was formerly used for temporary buildings that were not residential in nature. Terraced forms of development, such as Marmont Row and Police Cottages were, he stated, a traditional building form in Stanley.

The 'sou'wester' design concept sought to introduce a traditional design feature into a modern building. Two of six proposed blocks were three storeys in height, however, the building would be dug into the hill by three metres below the height of Fitzroy Road which would significantly reduce its impact. In addition, the two three metre storey elements were positioned so that they have minimal impact on residential properties on the south side of Fitzroy Road.

Abused in BA

STAR Princess cruisers Scotsman Scott Cowper and his wife Jenny in Stanley on Wednesday were among others who witnessed Argentine protesters on the dock in Buenos Aires on Saturday. Action against cruise liners visiting the Falklands or carrying the flags of countries associated with Britain continued in Buenos Aires last weekend when passengers leaving and boarding the Star Princess and the Seabourn Sojourn were subjected to verbal abuse by protesters.

Penguin News

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

THEY were less defensive and fearful. They were happier. They were more assertive. They owned their future. They were a nation. Dr Jorge Stanham (Director of the British Hospital in Montevideo talking of his second visit to the Falklands 11 years after his first)

A COLUMN entirely dedicated to praising medical and dental staff for fixing various parts of me over recent weeks would probably be deserved, that along with thanking the Deputy Editor for beavering away at the paper while I have wobbled around feeling sorry for myself, however in the interests of journalism I should probably cast my net a little wider in terms of subject matter.

With reference to the quote above then, Dr Stanham's recent excellent article offered something of a morale boost at a time when, after a year that included many weeks of requests for interviews relating to Falklands politics, and in turn the requirement to respond, hopefully reasonably intelligently and apparently spontaneously, to much repeated questions, it seemed I had become quite desensitised to the subject.

As an example (and apart from a current urge to enthusiastically avoid foreign journalists) while recently viewing scenes on Sky News of Argentines burning copies of the Sun's response to Kirchners' open letter on the Falklands, my emotional reaction to the item added up to precisely zilch. It might easily have been covering issues about which I knew absolutely nothing and about communities entirely unconnected with my own. Thus the sense of appreciation I felt when confronted with Dr Stanham's remarkably perceptive understanding of what the Falklands had become, was a particularly welcome one. It reassured me that my senses had not in fact become deadened to the Falklands itself, neither its past, present or future, but rather to the portrayal of the political issue as an international media drama, fuelled as it so often is by the melodramatic and ludicrous behaviour of the Argentine nation.

My thanks then to the good doctor for the reminder that the demoralising embellished fantasy of the Falklands and its problems with Argentina, offered up to the rest of the world, is miles apart from the reality of our steady, optimistic march towards that which we require to flourish.

On a more domestic issue, I and the Media Trust are concerned by the increasing abuse of the Penguin News online subscription system. Our IT consultant has identified a high number of users apparently undermining the system by username and password sharing. We will in the future be contacting those individuals/organisations and potentially disabling their accounts.

He believed the greatest impact from this development would be from the north, however, this would be screened to a large extent by the existing FIC complex.

Committee member Mr Graham France said that he believed the suggested icing of the road was unlikely to happen due to the disposition of the three storey elements and the fact that the whole terrace was dug into the slope of the hill. He pointed out that neighbouring buildings on the north side of Fitzroy Road were higher than the highest point of the proposed development.

While she joined with other members in approving the proposal, MLA Jan Cheek expressed reservations about allowing any three storey building in Stanley, which she felt might be setting a dangerous precedent.

Planning applications meet with Committee's approval

APART from approving the FIC's proposal to build 26 two-bedroom apartments on the north side of Fitzroy Rd. (see Page 1), the Planning and Building Committee approved all ten other applications at their meeting on Thursday.

The approvals granted varied in scale from allowing Mr Gareth Goodwin to erect a polytunnel at 15 Hansen Hill to applications from Goodwin Offshore Ltd to erect an 18m x 20m extension to the Chandlery Estate and create hardstanding and erect warehousing at 1 Gordon Lines Road and 9 Coastal Road.

FIC terrace aside, the approvals most likely to impact on the visual aspect of Stanley were those given to the FIC to demolish a wool shed and warehouse on their East Jetty and to build three new houses on the site of 4 Hebe Street, despite an objection on largely aesthetic grounds from Mr Eric Goss. Miss Anna Luxton was granted permission to build a house at 18 Kent Road and Mr Luis and Mrs Yhovana Quinto were also given outline planning consent to erect a dwelling to the rear of 88 Davis Street, subject to certain conditions.

Rockhopper plans three wells

ROCKHOPPER Exploration is planning a minimum of three exploration and appraisal wells on its North Falkland Basin acreage in 2014.

In a corporate update presentation this week to the City in London, Rockhopper gave details of four potential exploration wells. They are Chatham G, S2, Zebedee and George 1.

The Zebedee well would tag six exploration prospects while the George 1 well would appraise the Casper South and Beverley discoveries as well as tag four exploration prospects if selected for drilling.

Although the exploration prospects identified in the presentation are considered, "drill-ready," with drilling at least a year away, the final line-up of which wells will be drilled has not yet been confirmed. An invitation to tender for a drilling rig is in preparation, noted the Rockhopper press release.

With the high cost of mobilisation of a rig to the Falklands it is also thought likely that the minimum three-well exploration and appraisal drilling phase will be slotted in just ahead of the Sea Lion development drilling phase.

The corporate update gave details of the Sea Lion floating production, storage and offloading (FPSO) system which will operate in 450 metres deep water for tanker offloading when the first shipment of oil in the third quarter of 2017 climbing to 30,000 barrels per day in 2019.

FIC employees can 'share in any future prosperity'

FALKLAND Islands Holdings (FLH) parent company of the Falklands Islands Company (FIC) has made a Share Incentive Plan (SIP) available to employees of the company. FIC Director and General Manager Roger Spink told Penguin News he was, "pretty pleased," with the take up so far from FIC employees.

FLH has offered all employees who are UK tax residents the opportunity to participate in the SIP whether they work full or part time. It has also extended the scheme to Falkland Islands tax residents applying the same basic principles of the SIP as are enjoyed by UK tax residents.

Mr Spink said he was glad that the Falkland Islands Government was, "able to allow the scheme to operate under the same scheme as the UK from a taxation point of view. We are very pleased that employees have been able to take part in it because we want them to share in any future prosperity of the company."

Under the scheme a trust is set up to acquire in the market 'partnership shares' on behalf of employees, with the cost of these purchases of the company's ordinary shares being met by employees from their monthly salary or weekly wages up to a maximum of £1,500 per annum per employee. FLH will then fund the cost of purchasing in the market one 'matching share' for every three partnership shares acquired.

The benefit of matching and partnership shares held by the SIP Trust will be passed to employees after five years. Under the terms of the SIP, 'matching shares' will be forfeited if employees leave within three years of the award unless the employee leaves for certain specified reasons, such as redundancy or retirement.

Employees can withdraw their 'partnership shares' from the SIP at any time. However, 'matching shares' may be subject to forfeiture if the corresponding 'partnership shares' are withdrawn within three years of purchase.

Shares have to be transferred to employees, and employees have to remove their shares from the SIP when they leave employment with a group company.

Under the terms of the company's share dealing code, directors and applicable employees will not be permitted to join or leave the SIP or change their contributions during close periods.

The company's remuneration Committee will review annually the operation of the SIP. Shares for the SIP will be purchased in the market around the seventh of each month.

Company Chair David Hudd and Managing Director John Foster and Mr Spink have already enrolled in the SIP that began at the end of November.

Following FLH Results for the six months ended September 30 2012, Chair David Hudd said: "At FIC, we are investing to take advantage of the economic growth that will follow from the exploitation of hydrocarbon discoveries. In July we completed a £10 million equity fund-raising and since then, a succession of announcements has confirmed our view that the Islands have an exciting future. FIC has multiple development opportunities and our intent is demonstrated by the recent appointment of a property director to the FIC management team.

"The general outlook for the Group remains positive and we are confident that our portfolio of business will continue to perform well."

MBE for Peter Brown

PETER Brown, the former Director of International Operations at Chichester College, has been awarded an MBE for recognition for services to further education. Peter visited the Islands on a number of occasions in order to talk to students aiming to study at Chichester College and to meet with their parents and the parents of the students already attending the college.

A spokesperson for the Falkland Islands Government Education Department said: "Peter is a great ambassador for the Islands and we congratulate him on his award."

Q What was the budget (General Fund) outturn for the year ended 30 June 2012?

How does that compare with the original approved estimate and the revised estimate as reported at the last budget session?

A Public Accounts responses provided by Acting Head of Finance... The actual net operating surplus for the year was £7.953m compared to an original deficit as per the approved estimates of £3.283m and a revised budget surplus at quarter 3 of £1.087m. The main driver for the £6.866m positive variance between the revised estimate and the actual relates to additional revenue receipts. Specifically, £4m related to additional revenue received due to an excellent illex season, the uncertainty of which was referred to in section 4.5 of the Quarter Three Management Report. Approximately a further £1m related to additional tax revenue associated with extended oil industry work. Departmental expenditure was also underspent by £0.8m at the end of quarter 3, and by £1.3m as at the 30 June 2012. This underspend represents a variety of smaller variances across departments with the main contributor at the 30th of June 2012 being £1.3m of strategic and training reserves, which have been carried forward for use in future years.

Q What was the value of total reserves for All Funds financed by taxpayers' equity as at 30 June 2012 (2011 £301m & 2010 £276m)?

A The value of total reserves for all FIG funds financed by taxpayers' equity as at 30 June 2012 and as reported to the Standing Finance Committee in October 2012 was £321m. This figure includes tangible fixed assets valued at £90m.

Q Do those total reserves include FIG's investments in its statutory corporations (FIDC and FLH) and if not what would they add to the figure?

A Currently FIG does not consolidate its accounts with those of FIDC and FLH which are prepared, audited, and will be available separately.

Q What was GDP for 2011 and how does that compare with 2010 and 2009?

A National Accounts responses provided by Head of Policy... GDP figures for 2011 are not yet available. Production of this data relies on analysis of data from tax returns which are not submitted until late 2012.

Therefore production of data for 2011 will not be possible until 2013. GDP for 2010 is estimated at approx. £130 million, up from £102 million in 2009 - in large part due to strong performance of the fishing industry.

Q What was the GDP forecast for 2012 and are we on track to achieve it?

A There is no formal GDP forecast currently produced for the Islands, and the limitations of data collection (see previous answer) make it extremely difficult to track GDP in real time.

This is an issue that the Policy

Unit hopes to address in the future, and have recently appointed a Statistics Officer who will take up post in the new year.

Q What is the target impact on our balance of payments and GDP of the current import substitution programme promoted and sponsored by FIDC?

A No formal targets for value of imports substituted were set for the programme; the extent to which this is achieved will be influenced by the nature of the projects that are funded, and by other factors such as changes in local demand for produce.

Research has suggested the potential for 200 metric tonnes of horticultural produce to be substituted, though this is not the formal target for the scheme, which was recently redesigned due to poor take up.

FIDC will be undertaking an evaluation of the programme at the end of the fiscal year, at which point it may be possible to provide some estimates of the volumes of produce the programme has supported.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

JUST to confirm I still have all my marbles and did let PN know on 10 December that I would not be producing a column last week as I hoped to take a few days off, so it was entirely their decision to fill the space with a repeat.

Last year flashed by and MLAs had to commit unprecedented time to their roles here and overseas. Shortage of staff and FIG's seeming inability to recruit many replacements until after people have left, have combined to create frustrating delays and gaps in services. Like the Deputy Editor we look forward to seeing a streamlining of processes and ways of cutting through unnecessary bureaucracy. I have always subscribed to the view that managers should be allowed to manage and supported when they have difficult tasks as long as they are getting it right. MLAs should only intervene in the civil service if policy is being ignored or things are going wrong.

Those of us who were concerned that we were slow in responding to the Argentine advert in a couple of UK papers need not have been concerned. Such was the crassly naïve wording and presentation that, as so often before, they had done the work for us. Many of us have enjoyed half a dozen spoof responses it inspired, some published in UK papers and others created in other countries. It will be a while before the guffaws and howls of laughter entirely subside.

Next week is the 171st anniversary of the arrival of the first of my ancestors at Port Louis. I often speculate what may have induced them to bring their four children, including a baby just a few months old, on a gruelling three month sea voyage to live in an unknown country in what was little more than a turf hut. It is a tribute to their hardiness that all four survived childhood along with two siblings born after the move to Stanley the following year. I also wonder what they would make of the Islands today and the scores of their descendants who still live here.

Apology

Jan certainly does have all of her marbles and I apologise unreservedly for inadvertently publishing a previously used column - hopefully the Editor will recover all of her own marbles shortly - Ed

Women prefer screening in fight against breast cancer

THE majority of women prefer to accept the risk of possible over-diagnosis as a result of screening, "and wish to continue to be screened," according to a paper presented to the Health and Medical Services Committee by Chief Medical Officer Dr Angela Rowlands on Thursday.

The paper, which was passed by the Committee, followed another produced by Dr Queenborough in July 2012 that referred to the report of the independent UK panel on breast screening which looked at the possible harm caused by screening.

At that time it was agreed that consultation would take place locally and that from the results a decision would need to be made whether to set up breast cancer screening in 2013.

Dr Rowlands explained, "little formal local consultation has taken place on this subject, but the weight of feeling seems to be towards hosting a screening visit."

"In addition, the independent panel's report supports the continuation of the screening service in the UK, as long as all women to be screened are properly informed of the risks involved."

From the last visit here when 282 women were screened six had treatment for breast cancer following the screening. There were no false positives.

Scanning of the thyroid was also performed and one case of thyroid carcinoma was picked up.

The evidence from the report was that for every life saved three women have treatment for a cancer which would never have been fatal.

In the paper Dr Rowlands recommended that information concerning the risks of harm should be clearly explained in a leaflet and then women can make an informed choice as to whether they are screened or not. In the UK, leaflets will be produced over the next few months.

Dr Rowlands said in her recommendations: "As with the last screening, we in the Falklands can produce something similar which can be given to all women in the screening age group to help them decide if they would like to be screened. They can be also advised that they can talk to members of the GP team and the CNO if they wish to know any more."

She said: "The screening by the team from Chile in 2010 was of an extremely high quality. Additional thyroid screening was a bonus and picked up several benign conditions which were followed up by GPs.

"It is therefore recommended that, on the balance of evidence, screening should be offered to the FI population.

"Assuming that this recommendation is supported, a total of £60,000 will be added to the 2013/14 budget submission to fund this visit.

"It is intended that the charge for the screening shall remain as it was during the last visit (at £20 per person). This should result in c. £6,000 of revenue being raised to help offset the cost.

"The Cancer Support & Awareness Trust are also to be contacted to request their kind assistance in the organisation and support of the visit."

Original UK findings

Evidence from a focus group organised by Cancer Research UK and attended by members of the Independent UK Panel also showed many women felt that accepting the offer of breast screening was worthwhile despite the possibility of over diagnosis. As a result it felt information should be made available in a transparent and objective way to women invited to screening so that they can make informed decisions.

Midwife visit

DOCTOR Jane Rogers, a Supervisor of Midwives from Southampton General Hospital arrived in the Islands on January 7 and is due to be here until January 18.

According to a report from Director Health & Education David Jenkins this is to further develop the work she undertook in late 2012 about the future of the FI midwifery service and the hospital's links with Southampton.

On January 14, as a part of Dr Roger's visit, Dr Matthew Coleman will also visit the Islands. He is the Clinical Director & Senior Lecturer in Southampton's Fetal and Maternal Medicine unit. He will be discussing the future of the obstetrics service and the standards the KEMH should be working to.

Falklands leaders in cephalopod science

AN award for outstanding research has been awarded to a Falklands scientist at the Cephalopod International Advisory Council (CIAC). CIAC is an international consultative body that was founded in 1983 with the aim to stimulate, accelerate and influence the direction of investigation of squids, octopods, cuttlefishes and their relatives. It also provides help and advice on different aspects of cephalopod biology, including those relevant to the management of their increasingly important fisheries.

The CIAC consists of eighteen distinguished scientists twelve of whom are elected for six years' term at the symposiums, which is held every three years, and six others remain until the next elections

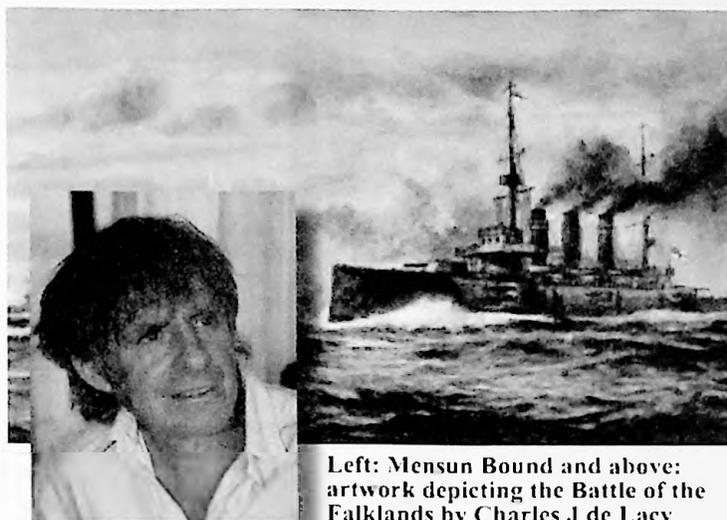

The recent symposium of CIAC took place from October 27 to November 2 in Florianopolis, Brazil, and was attended by 160 delegates from 24 countries, among them two Falkland scientists from the Fisheries Department: a member of CIAC Vlad Laptikhovsky and ex-president of CIAC Alexander (Sasha) Arkhipkin. A total of 94 oral presentations and 133 posters dealt with different aspects of cephalopod biology and fisheries, primarily with squid and octopus population dynamics, environmental effects, stock assessment and management, age and growth, reproductive biology, aquaculture, role in marine systems, systematic studies, and evolution.

A vivid discussion and exchange of ideas gave rise to a few project aimed to develop our knowledge of these exotic and tasty creatures with complicate behaviour and very flexible life spans.

Among traditional topics raised at the symposium was a choice for the best scientific cephalopod publication that summarises the most outstanding research during last three years. This honorary title was awarded to a paper of Sasha as the first author (under the title 'Vestigial phragmocone in the gladius points to a deep-water origin of squid') where he proved that modern squid evolved in deep seas, not in shallow waters as all marine biologists and palaeontologists believed before. The paper was selected unanimously, in spite of the wide range of researches nominated for this award.

Sasha was also re-elected as a CIAC member. This brought the total number of the Falkland scientists in CIAC to two out of eighteen.

Plans for Battle Day anniversary

AT the invitation of Mensun Bound, some twenty-five people, including three members of the Legislative Council, met on Sunday night to consider ways in which the one hundredth anniversary of the Battle of the Falkland Islands should be marked, when it falls on December 8, 2014.

Mr Bound, who is recognised as one of the world's leading marine archaeologists, said that he believed that a serious opportunity would be lost if early steps were not taken to plan for an adequate commemoration of this important event.

Falkland Islanders of his and earlier generations had grown up with the stories of the battles of the Falklands and of Colonel, which preceded it.

One had been the biggest British naval victory since Trafalgar and the other, possibly the biggest single defeat. Both had involved the deaths of thousands of sailors and were inextricably bound up with the history of the Falklands.

There being general agreement among those gathered that both these events should be commemorated in a special way in 2014, Mensun Bound announced that Mrs Phyllis Rendell, who was unavoidably absent from the meeting, had agreed to act as co-ordinator of any events and activities which might be planned.

It is expected that another meeting will be held in the near future to consider any proposals that people may have and to begin the planning of their implementation.

1. What is your most prized possession? Nothing physical or man made but my memories of my life, good and bad. They all have meaning. I have done a lot especially having spent 14 years in the Royal Navy

2. Who would you most like to have a cup of tea with? Ralph Fiennes. What an amazing man and an even more amazing life

3. If you had a motto what would it be? I guess to live each day to the full, as each day is new and not used before

4. What in your every day life drives you crazy? Traffic jams and queuing; great British traditions. Add to that getting fish and chips and you have a hat trick of traditions

5. What is your nickname and why? Billy when I was in the Navy as it fitted with Bancroft. These days it's Dog as I've been a dog handler in my present job for 13 years; both patrol and drug dogs

6. If you could travel anywhere in the world where would it be? I've travelled extensively and to some beautiful locations but I'd love to either go to South Georgia or the Antarctic

7. What is your favourite TV programme? 'Lie to me' starring Tim Roth. It's about a guy who can read people's expressions. Tim plays the part brilliantly

8. What food could you never give up? Lamb! After a long flight to the Falklands I was welcomed with a roast lamb dinner. Beat that

PUBLIC NOTICE

REFERENDUM 10TH AND 11TH MARCH 2013

The Registry invites applications for casual assistance in the up-coming Referendum on 10th and 11th March 2013 for staffing the polling stations and counting votes. This will require a flexible approach to working hours and locations, a friendly, helpful attitude and a genuine desire to assist the Falkland Islands community.

Assistants may be required to undertake work on either East or West Falkland as well as in Stanley, so a current valid driving licence and a good knowledge of camp roads would be an advantage, as would previous relevant experience.

In addition, those wishing to undertake this work may request to be placed on a casual list in order that they may be contacted in the future for the provision of similar electoral services as required.

Remuneration for this will be paid at the rate of £7.89 per hour in Grade G. If you do not have Falkland Islands Status or a Permanent Residence Permit you may have to apply for a work permit.

For further information and an application form, please contact the Registrar General, Beth Reid on telephone: 27269 or email: registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk

Best ever holiday

I HAVE recently returned from the most amazing holiday in the Falklands. I and a friend spent a week on the Islands from 8 to 15 December: my first ever trip.

Having no military background but looking to visit the significant scenes of battle during the Argentine occupation of 1982, when we first decided to plan a trip, we had no idea how to get to the Islands, let alone see the sites we wanted to visit.

I have to say from the outset the whole trip was planned with the considerable assistance of all at ITT in Stanley. Sally, Cathy and girls there planned the whole trip from London to Santiago and onto Mount Pleasant, organised all the sightseeing that we wanted to see and do and accommodation. Superb effort, thanks very much.

I would just like to pass my thanks on all those great people we met in Stanley, Port Howard, Sea Lion Island and Darwin and Goose Green.

It was my most memorable holiday ever. The highlight I have to say was Sea Lion Island and the sea lions, penguins and Orca whales.

Special thanks to Graham and Fiona at Darwin House, Wayne and Sue at Port Howard and Jenny at Sea Lion Lodge; your hospitality did you all proud. Also to the staff at the Malvinas Hotel in Stanley (the only time we had a room key), the bar staff at Deano's and the Globe - thanks, we enjoyed a few drinks in both locations.

Most of my friends, work colleagues and customers (I work for a UK Bank) thought I was mad to go the Falklands. I can say that my photographs and videos have left them speechless.

I hope the tourist industry goes from strength to strength in 2013 and beyond. I will be promoting the Islands as great tourist destination the best I can from Nottingham in England.

Outstanding care at KEMH

I WOULD like to express my sincere thanks to all the people involved in my medi-vac with a severe nosebleed from the Hornby Mountains, West Falkland on the morning of Tuesday December 18, 2012 and my subsequent care whilst in hospital. Thanks to Dr Becky, the RAF crew and the doctors, nurses and staff at KEMH. The care my husband and I received from everyone was outstanding. Your hospital and health service here in Stanley is first class.

I would also like to thank my fellow patients, who made me, from the UK, feel so welcome. You will know who you are. I hope you are now all feeling better and have had a lovely Christmas.

I was thrilled this morning to be given the all clear to return to the West with my husband to continue our plant hunting for Falklands Conservation.

My best wishes to you all for 2013.

Designation not done and dusted

THE article in PN January 4, 2013 on page three seems to make the assumption that the designation of roads, or Camp tracks, is all done and dusted, thus causing a lot of anxiety to many.

I believe that is not the case, as EXCO paper 299/12 recently released to the public, quite clearly states in recommendation b) 'to approve the proposed consultation on detailed implementation and draft legislation set out in section 10'.

It follows that consultation with the public should be the next step in this process, and after taking into account people's thoughts and concerns (as FIG have done with the location of the new port, minimum wage, referendum issues for instance) then, and only then, should any decision be made.

The designation of Camp tracks as a whole shouldn't be rushed into as was the case in the past, resulting in an inequality situation. If we are to change and designate all Camp tracks, we should make things better for all, not worse.

Seamen's Mission in safe hands

TRUSTEES of the Stanley Seamen's Mission wish strenuously to assure Mike and Kirsten Hughes, and indeed the whole community of the Falkland Islands, that the future of the Lighthouse Seamen's Centre is in safe hands and that there's no plan to exclude the general public from continuing its valuable contribution to the Centre's vital work.

The founders' original vision was a simple and passionately-held desire to support seafarers working the waters around the Falkland Islands.

This vision underpins the five 'objects' of the Mission's 1998 Declaration of Trust, with the key word 'seafarer' included in each one. The same vision binds and inspires present trustees.

But how things have moved on! Trustees gratefully acknowledge the significant sums of money now regularly contributed by local fishing companies, by the UK-based Fisherman's Mission, by our local charity shop Bargains Galore, and by personal donors. We likewise acknowledge generous provision last year by the International Transport Federation of a new vehicle, and the earlier financial support of ITT and FIG in providing accommodation for the Lighthouse Centre's managers. And although trustees can no longer justify (or indeed require) an annual subvention from FIG, we remain grateful to FIDC for use of our present premises on a peppercorn rent.

It is this financial underpinning and material support that enabled trustees to provide our Centre's managers with a recent sizeable increase of salary, improved terms and conditions, and to invest a large sum of money in ongoing refurbishment of their accommodation.

There are, however, issues to be worked through. Successive managers of the Seamen's Centre have sought to build on their predecessors' achievements and to develop the important interface between local community and visiting seafarers. But the practicalities of communication, sharing of space and facilities, and the unpredictable timing of crew visits - usually during evening hours - does not ensure 'contact with the people of the Islands in a relaxed and natural way.'

Moreover, expecting managers to provide huge numbers of excellent meals for locals during busy lunch periods, especially at weekends, risks consequent knock-on effects on the time and energy required to develop the heart of their calling - support to seafarers! This is largely why few of the former centres of the UK's Fishermen's Mission now operate in this way.

Most seafarers do not require meals from the Centre. The present secure financial basis of the Lighthouse Centre, and the excellent provision it makes for its staff, is no longer primarily dependent upon profits from a café serving full meals to locals. The provision of a drinks, cake and sandwich bar could perhaps achieve the same goal - with less stress all round. The perennial responsibility of trustees is to ensure funding and resources are channelled appropriately and effectively to the needs of seafarers. The best powers of body, mind and spirit of all concerned - paid staff and volunteers - should be directed towards this priority.

Present temporary arrangements for the Centre - occasioned by unexpected resignations, planned staff holidays and the post-Christmas low period - aim to ensure ongoing provision for seafarers, necessary pause for reflection, and wise decisions about future needs for this more-focused approach. Please God, seafarers and their families stand only to gain.

Pulling the wool over his eyes?

WITH reference to Dick Sawle's letter about Petrol prices - I think that Stanley Services are pulling the wool over his eyes as well.

If the current (again increased) price is to be believed then I think the calculations should be published because I just do not believe that the present price can be justified. It is especially hard on the farming community because although the amount used may not compare with diesel, nearly all farmers use motorbikes and quads for sheep work and the cost of this is a real burden.

If Stanley Services won't publish a detailed price justification then I think it should be referred to the Public Accounts Committee to look into in view of the fact that FIG own 45 per cent of the company.

Sentimental Ruby Wedding journey to San Carlos for Heather and Snoozer

FORTY years after the day Heather and Robin Smith were married on December 21 at San Carlos on East Falklands, they returned to enjoy a memorable outing and a host of good memories.

The couple were married in 1972 by farm manager Adrian Monk with Ken Berntsen as bestman and Arina Berntsen bridesmaid.

In true Heather and Robin party style their ruby wedding anniversary was another day not to be forgotten.

The celebrations began at 2pm at the home of Sheila and Terence McPhee of Kingsford Valley, San Carlos with drinks and nibbles for around 30 friends and family, some of whom had attended the actual wedding. A very moving speech was made by Robin which had Heather in tears especially when bestman Ken produced a ring out of his suit pocket for Robin to give to her. Robin had actually had Heather's original wedding ring remade but it had not arrived in time for the presentation. Photos were then taken in the same spot as 40 years ago.

At around 4pm the convoy of vehicles left San Carlos for Stanley ending up at the FIDF hall where more family and friends joined the celebrations which involved a very lively dance until the early hours.

Heather and Robin would like to thank everyone for making it a true day to remember, especially to those that went to San Carlos and joined them on the fun journey back to Stanley.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24-hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.

Polar medal for FIDS' Ted

LONG time member of the Falkland Islands Association, and friend of the Falklands, Ted Clapp has been awarded the Polar Medal for his Secondment Service to the Falkland Islands Dependencies Survey (FIDS) from 1957 to 1961.

Mr Clapp, father of all-round Falklands sportsman Kevin Clapp, sailed from Southampton on board RRS John Biscoe in late October 1957 and arrived in Stanley in late November after a stop at Tristan da Cunha to unload stores and water piping.

He told Penguin News, "I was scheduled to sail south, on board John Biscoe, to winter at Argentine Islands as 'Radio Op' but on arrival at Port Stanley and on a request from Lt J Wynne-Edwards RN I was temporarily assigned to the Royal Naval Survey Party B to act as Wireless Operator and assistant Coxswain, aboard the RNSP 25 foot survey launch for independent survey off the Grahamland Coast from Anvers Island south to Ferrin Head, and to establish a refuge anchorage at the old BGLE base on Winter Island within the Argentine Islands group."

Having completed the assignment, some three months later he was placed ashore at the Dependencies Scientific Station Base F, Argentine Islands.

During the winter of 1958 he acted as the Base Radio Operator at that very busy station comprising 11 men.

During the late summer of 1958/59 he took part in an abortive attempt to relieve Base 'W' on Detaille Island off the Loubet Coast. He was flown onto base by helicopter from USS Icebreaker Edisto but eventually it was decided to close the base and instead they dog sledged 25 miles to the sea ice edge to meet up with the Edisto. RRS John Biscoe and the US Coastguard Icebreaker Northwind.

Mr Clapp said: "Thus during the late summer of 1958/59 I transferred, via RRS Shackleton and RRS Biscoe, to Base D, Hope Bay, a major FIDS sledging survey base of 19 wintering men and some 60 husky dogs."

There he acted as second radio operator and as a general assistant and dog handler: "As such I made one depot laying sledge trip and a longer survey sledging trip down the Grahamland East Coast and up onto the Plateau. I took the nine dog team 'The Counties' as my own."

"During the winter of 1959 I was asked by FIDS Headquarters if I would stay a further winter and move to a team to establish a new base, 'T', on Adelaide Island during 1960. I agreed but reminded FIDS HQ that I was still in the RN on secondment, I heard no more."

After an abortive attempt to reach Adelaide Island on board MV Kista Dan Mr Clapp was made Base Leader of a small party of six men and landed at the Old BGLE hut (and RNSP refuge) with his dog team plus one other team: "We were tasked to carry out sledging survey and geological coastal surveys, and to lay out an ice runway suitable for landing an Otter and a Beaver aircraft for an attempt to fly us and our teams down to Adelaide Island towards the end of winter."

The attempt failed as one aircraft was destroyed on landing. After spending the winter (1960) doing as much work as they could they were relieved by ship and he journeyed to Stanley and then on to Montevideo by RMS Darwin, and from there by BOAC 'Comet' to the UK.

He reported to HMS Drake, Plymouth, on February 6, 1961 and was discharged March 2, 1961 but transferred to the RNSR Special List.

Clapp Point at 65.21S 64.01W was named after Mr Clapp by the UK Antarctic Place Names Committee.

He is married to Jean and is father to Karen and Kevin.

The Polar Medal

Presented by the reigning monarch, the polar medal was instituted in 1904 for members of Captain Scott's first expedition to the Antarctic. It was struck in both bronze and silver until 1939, when the award of the bronze medal was discontinued. Initially a minimum period of service in the Antarctic of at least 12 months was required and emphasis was placed on service in support of the team effort in the harsh weather and dangerous conditions encountered, as well as on individual effort. The award was made on the recommendation of the Admiralty, or in the case of Commonwealth countries, by the appropriate Minister of State. In 1954 the regulations governing the award of the medal were revised. It was made clear the medal was to be conferred on those who took an active part in an expedition which made notable advances in the exploration of the polar regions and underwent the hazards and rigours of the region, whether on land, sea, or in the air. It was only open to those serving an expedition organised or recognised by UK or Commonwealth governments, and that in extraordinary circumstances those supporting polar exploration, rather than directly taking part in it, could be given the medal. Further Royal Warrants in 1970 and 1998 updated the conditions of award.

Since 1998 the 'service in support of the acquisition of knowledge of Polar regions shall normally be at least ten years' such service in order to be considered for the medal and a greater emphasis is now placed on individual service. The 1998 revision of Regulations added to the geographical area in which service was required by including a number of islands, and for the first time made reference to the United Kingdom Polar Medal Assessment Committee, made up of distinguished individuals with a wide knowledge of polar affairs who are responsible for examining recommendations received for the award of the medal.

Anita Dan bell reunited with Endurance in Chatham

THE ship's bell of the Anita Dan has been presented to the Chatham Historic Dockyard by Jean Allen and her son George for display and safekeeping alongside a model of HMS Endurance.

The Anita Dan was built in 1956 as a general cargo vessel for the Danish Shipping company J Lauritzen. The vessel was subsequently sold to the Royal Navy in 1967 and following conversion became the Antarctic survey vessel HMS Endurance.

The bell was given for services to the company to Mrs Allen's brother John, who was the first choice dock pilot for J Lauritzen ships arriving and departing on the Thames.

Following Mr Allen's death in 1987, the bell passed to Jean Allen's son George.

HAPPY New Year! And what a lovely day it was to start it with too!

For the first time that I can ever remember, the sun forgot to come out over Christmas and Stanley Sports had to be postponed. Instead of seeing people burnt to a crisp at this time of year, there are lots of pale, and rather long, faces. The racecourse is almost afloat, so who knows when the Hundredth Sports Meeting will now take place. Sadly a lot of people will have had to take themselves, and their horses, back home again.

It is no wonder that we think of Great Britain as our mother country in every way; even if you forget our history and try to change our culture, nothing can change the way our weather always copies whatever England had six months ago. The weather we have seen since long before Christmas is exactly what they had eight thousand miles away last May, June and July. I guess, therefore, we have yet more rain to come. Fortunately we have no rivers to burst their banks and cause the horrendous floods they've suffered, but we are very likely to find our crops faring in much the same way as farmers have over there. Already the ground is soaking and, in this garden anyway, our very badly drained grounds make it almost impossible to step on the borders and clear up the rather lush growth of chickweed and grass. The ornamental plants are growing just as well although somewhat hidden away. At least they don't need staking; they are well supported by other wanted, and unwanted, plants.

Although the light levels are not particularly good, the tomatoes are forming fruit and a lot of time has to be spent removing those extra 'branches' which keep trying to form in the axils between stem and leaf. The various marrows, squashes and cucumbers are starting to flower. Nothing needs to be done to them, except to remove any male flowers that may appear on the cucumbers. If allowed to fertilize the female fruit, the resulting cucumbers will be very bitter. The pumpkins need to be treated in a different manner; they do need help. When a flower opens and has a fruit behind it, a male flower needs to be removed from the plant and pushed into the female flower. At the beginning of the season there tend to be only male flowers, which, when needed, are no longer available (typical males). However, one male flower can be brushed over two or three of the fruiting ones and, nature being what it is, there are always more fruit and flowers to come if these fail.

The strawberries, in the tunnel are doing very well at the moment. They need watching all the time though, especially in this damp weather, for grey mould; this causes them to rot very quickly and the spores spread to other fruit too. Quite a few have made their way to the trailer already this year.

The old potatoes have lasted very well and we are now eating the 'earlies'. Being of a lazy nature I prefer largish ones to the little fiddly ones, especially when it comes to cleaning them, and so I'm always delighted with one particular early. I haven't the foggiest what it is called; here it goes by the name of the person who gave me a couple of seeds to start my own 'colony' and so 'Val's Earlies' get put in here and there and even in pots. They have never let me down yet, and this year they even beat those named early ones that I had planted in May to over-winter under cover. Never mind the mint, bring on the butter!

One thing the awful weather led to was a lot of baking and cooking in general, and so it was with the old potatoes left in the shed. I cooked them in batches, mashed them and turned them into Duchesse potatoes, so easily made with mash mixed with an egg or two and then piped onto a tray in whatever shape I can manage. I find most soft items are best frozen on a tray which is covered in greaseproof paper and then popped into bags or containers once solid. The potato cakes, which are so handy as a stand-by for any meal come from a recipe in a very old book passed on to me by my Granny many years ago. They are made by mixing 1½ pounds of mashed potato with 10 ounces of flour and, the most surprising ingredient, especially as you cannot taste it, horseradish. I don't grow that as we don't use it and so I use 4ozs of horseradish sauce instead. These are great used straight from the freezer and grilled or fried with a very small amount of butter. Any leftover potatoes when I ran out of inspiration went into small containers as mash, to be used in that way or as stew thickeners. Though not quite as tasty as using mushroom, or any other powdered soup for that purpose, they do the job just as well when the cupboard is bare!

And now, with the day looking like a reasonable one I shall get my working gear on and hopefully, finally get the rest of the carrots, parsnips and swedes thinned. And the last potatoes hoed if I still have the energy left by then.

Blustery first field shoot of 2013

SUNDAY started with perfect weather conditions for the Archery Club's annual field shoot. We wanted to host a competition before our compound archer Darren from the Royal Navy, who has been shooting with us while stationed here, departed from the Islands.

It has been a pleasure having him and other members of HM Forces visit and shoot with us, and we welcome more.

A field shoot involves walking around a course of targets set out between 8m and 50m with some being slightly higher and some lower than the shooter. This event had 12 animal targets of various sizes and types, artificial hunting!

Each archer had three arrows to shoot per target. If the competitor miss with their first arrow, they move to the next shooting line, closer to the target, and shoot again. Moving closer does not always make it easier. The further away you hit the target from, the more points you score. Moving on to the next target a little challenge was added, three target faces were set up across ponds in the area.

We then split into four smaller groups and the competition began. Circuit One proved easier with all completing in good time before the archers stopped for smoko with bacon butties prepared by Mark Lewis, Christmas cake, mince pies, flapjacks and fridge cake.

After smoko, we moved on to Circuit 2, hindered by a very strong cross wind. It became difficult to keep the arrow steady on the rest. Managing to draw back was tricky for all at times.

A special mention to our younger members: Tamsin, James, Thomas Watson, Tom Short, and Craig Lewis, who despite the challenging westerly breeze all gave it their best shot.

This year, for the first time we had two compound bows shot by Darren and Mike. The compound bows showed that the faster arrow was less affected by the wind and they went on to claim the two highest places and scores at the end of the day. Mark Lewis showed his years of experience by coming out on top of the recurve shoots followed by Jo Lazo, who was the top lady shooter on the day. Jo was shooting her new Hoyt bow for only the second time; a warning to us all there I think.

The junior scores followed true to form and experience with Tamsin and James leading the scoring, although Tom, Craig and Thomas, pulled off some incredible shoots and evened out scores with some of the seniors of the club, on some targets.

A special mention should go to the new members of the club, Neil Mitchell, Steve Gill and Alison Short who all put in a very good effort on the day on their first outing of this kind. Neil recorded the 6th highest score on the day on his first ever outside shoot.

Ladies

- 1st Jo Lazo – 192 points
- 2nd Steph Thain – 160 points
- 3rd Alison Short – 32 points

Mens

- 1st Darren Bennion – 252 points
- 2nd Mike McLeod – 220 points
- 3rd Mark Lewis – 204 points

Juniors

- 1st Tamsin McLeod – 104 points
- 2nd James Tyrrell – 76 points
- 3rd Craig Lewis – 72 points

Thanks to all members for turning up for the field shoot. Mark for donating bacon, Jo for the bread rolls, Steff for the cakes and mince pies, Mike and Tamsin for the Christmas cake, and flapjacks.

Thanks also to Jo, Steff, Mike, Tamsin, Mark, Steve and Jason for the hard work and time in setting out the course on Saturday, and to all who assisted putting it all away. It was a fantastic event all round.

Free Insanity at FIDF

COLOUR Sergeant Trev Law of the Falkland Islands Defence Force is holding circuit sessions of the internationally acclaimed 'Insanity' workout at the FIDF Hall, at no charge.

The circuit sessions start with a warm up but move quickly into fast and powerful drills with frequent intervals of strength, power, resistance and training moves to improve core and abdominal muscles.

You are urged on throughout the sessions by the workout's creator, a bulky American choreographer and trainer who has worked with Hollywood's finest. If you needed more convincing a quick Google search for reviews reveals it is considered one of the hardest, if not the hardest, workout ever put on DVD.

The workout plan suggests six days of gruelling effort a week, for four weeks followed by a six day rest and another four weeks of hard effort for guaranteed 'rock-hard-ab' results.

While it is a little unrealistic to hold a fitness class nearly every day, luckily the sessions are so intense that a few a week will make a difference. There is hope of more than one session a week if there is a good turnout.

Come along to the FIDF Hall this Tuesday at 6pm for a circuit training session that promises to leave you gasping.

Please bring water. No equipment or weights needed.

Court upholds SG decision to refuse licence for Jacqueline

THE decision of the Director of Fisheries of the South Georgia Government to refuse a valuable toothfish licence for the 2012 season to a vessel with a long history in the fishery was upheld in court on Wednesday.

Quark Ltd, a fishing company jointly owned by MLA Mike Summers and a Spanish fishing company, applied in 2012 for a Judicial Review of the decision of the Director of Fisheries of the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) to refuse a licence to fish for Patagonian toothfish for their vessel MV Jacqueline for the 2012 season.

The case was heard in Stanley between November 27 and 30, 2012 before Chief Justice Mr Christopher Gardner QC, but his detailed judgement was only released on Wednesday, in the Falkland Islands Supreme Court.

Acting Judge, Mr Carl Gumsley, took an hour and a quarter to read the judgement. This included a preamble, in which it was explained that the purpose of a Judicial Review was not to consider the merits of a decision, but to consider whether the decision-making process was in itself lawful.

It was, according to Mr Justice Gardner, "for the applicant to establish on the balance of probabilities that the decision-maker took into account matters he ought not to have taken into account, or failed to take into account matters he should have taken into account, or has nevertheless come to a decision which is irrational."

The Chief Justice continued: "The threshold of irrationality is a high one, namely that the challenged decision is so unreasonable that no reasonable decision-maker could ever have come to it."

Quark had argued as the first of its grounds that the Director of Fisheries had breached 'natural justice' in making what it described as, "key changes," to his criteria for awarding licences, without the consultation that the company had a, "legitimate expectation," to receive.

Concluding a very lengthy summary of his reasons for dismissing this ground, Mr Justice Gardner said that while he accepted that Quark considered it had been disadvantaged by changes to the weighting of the licensing criteria and that the value of its historical participation in the South Georgia Fishery had been reduced by them, he had to view the situation from the perspective of the decision maker.

Any changes to the criteria, the Chief Justice said, might be regarded as benefitting some applicants and disadvantaging others. The repeated granting of a licence to the Jacqueline in the past should not in itself have generated any expectation that it would automatically be granted one in the future. "In 2012 all that it (Quark) had was the ability to apply for a fresh licence and an expectation that its application would, along with all the others, be considered fairly."

The second of the other three grounds for Quark's application concerned an allegation that the Director of GSGSSI's Fisheries had wrongly applied advice given to him by the British Government's Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs.

In Mr Justice Gardner's opinion, the Director had acted in accordance with this advice, which was to the effect that licences should be awarded to a minimum of two United Kingdom or United Kingdom Overseas Territory-flagged vessels. There were, in fact, three applications for licences from such vessels, two of which scored significantly higher than the Jacqueline when judged by the Director's criteria.

The criteria used by the Director were the subject of both the Third and Fourth of Quark's grounds, in particular the reduction in the weighting given to 'loyalty' to the GSGSSI Fishery.

Mr Gardner agreed with the contention of GSGSSI's counsel in November that the shift of weighting from 'loyalty' to 'track record' acknowledged the development of the Fishery from its uncertain early days, to the present competitive situation in which it was important to choose applicants that would raise the Fishery's standards.

The Chief Justice concluded that the Director's criteria were merely guidelines to enable him to arrive at an overall assessment of the strength of any particular applicant. These were, he said, "matters for the Director's expertise and not matters that a disappointed applicant can ask the court to review, short of irrationality."

Asked for a reaction to the judgement Mr Summers expressed unhappiness about the length of time it took for the decision to be delivered, its implications for GSGSSI's policy and the lack of value given to FI registration, adding, "Quark Fishing Ltd is disappointed, though not overly surprised, at the conclusions drawn by the Chief Justice in his review of the 2012 South Georgia Licensing process, in so much as it affected our company."

Penguin News

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

WHO needs holiday credits or even cultural ventilation when according to the New York Times, the Falklands is the place to holiday in 2013. Something of a relief bearing in mind the shocking cost of flights out of the Falklands, and (since Christmas) with at least one of my supermarket accounts the equivalent of a small country's gross external debt.

Incidentally the aim of my New Year's resolution is to spread future hefty purchasing around more than one retail entity; obviously in the interests of supporting more Falklands businesses and nothing to do with bills appearing less scary when viewed individually. A worthy yet naughtily sophisticated approach I feel, but somehow still without that crazy ass, devil-may-care, joi de vivre Mrs Kirchner brings to the whole subject of debt settlement (see page 3).

Then again it would be mortifying to find oneself caught up in the cat food aisle in a heated exchange with the Chandlery Manager Neville threatening me with a financial lock law and myself accusing him of vulture-like behaviour. Partly this is because I don't really know what it all means, but ultimately because I can hardly mimic Kirchner's 'refusal to pay' policy when his shop is the only source of my second favourite Scotch; sadly the Falklands has been devoid of my favourite for some years now.

Still I intend to follow with interest Mrs K's breathtaking 'flouting' of 'adherence to the rule of law and common financial standards' (Arnold Kling, Nick Schulz's Invisible Wealth: The Hidden) after all you can never pick up too many tips from a rogue dictator who blatantly takes the piss out of the global financial system and is, on the whole, allowed to get away with it.

And on that note perhaps Roger might consider accepting 25 Heineken ring pulls to every pound I spent in the FIC food hall in December?

No? Damn, life offers up such double standards.

IF an indication were needed that the Falklands is bounding into the realms of oil exploitation, the sudden growth in Penguin News advertising promoting everything from training courses to port facility creation must be one. Happy days then for Islands' growth and of course revenue for your local newspaper.

Along with that though the worry of an ever lengthening list of available jobs in government and one likely to expand with two major engineering projects in the offing (the Premier Oil temporary port facility and the planned deep water port project.) Presumably FIG has a plan to attempt to retain employees in the face of increased competition for human resources? It will be interesting to discover whether the need to pull government wages into line with the private sector will outweigh fears of inflation.

Six years for sexual assault

DAVID Reginald Thomas, 39, was sentenced on Wednesday, January 16 to six years imprisonment, for each of three charges of sexual assault of a child under 13, and two years for a fourth charge of meeting a child following sexual grooming. These sentences are to run concurrently.

Mr Thomas first appeared in court on these charges on October 25, but it was considered inappropriate for Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley to sit on the case due to his ongoing involvement in a civil matter involving persons related to the then alleged victim. Eventually, after he had entered a plea of not guilty, Mr Thomas's trial began on Wednesday January 9, with locum Senior Magistrate Amanda Rippon presiding.

Due to the serious nature of the case, barristers from the United Kingdom were also involved: Mr Peter Horgan for the Crown and Mr Christopher Hudson for the defence.

The offences related to a period of two months beginning in mid-June 2012, when Mr Thomas was a constant weekend visitor at his victim's home and involved what the locum Senior Magistrate described during her judgement as, "an appalling abuse of trust."

After finding Mr Thomas guilty on all charges, but before arriving at a suitable sentence, the locum Senior Magistrate said that it was unclear to her to what extent UK sentencing guidelines on this kind of case had been adopted in the Falkland Islands. Prosecuting Counsel, Mr Horgan, supported by Falkland Islands Senior Crown Counsel, Alison Inglis, was unable to assist so Ms Rippon called for a short adjournment, claiming that she needed advice as to what her sentencing powers might be.

Earlier, while admitting that a custodial sentence for his client was the only appropriate outcome once his guilt had been established, Mr Hudson said that he felt that the offences had been committed due to a combination of alcohol and loneliness. Having few friends who would visit him in jail would make any sentence harder for Mr Thomas who had arrived in the Falklands from St Helena in 2008.

The difficulty the locum Senior Magistrate had in identifying an appropriate authority to help her with sentencing in this case, perhaps supports the call for a complete revision of Falkland Islands law made by Senior Magistrate Carl Gumsley. (See page 11)

Sailing super gran passes by

SOLO circumnavigator Jeanne Socrates, 70, the oldest ever female to undertake the adventure is on her third attempt and passed by the Falklands earlier this week on her yacht Nereida.

Jeanne called in to the Falklands in May 2011 on her way to Cape Town after a knockdown just before rounding Cape Horn, "and I enjoyed my unexpected stay a lot," she told Penguin News via email this week.

She is presently trying for a solo, nonstop, unassisted circumnavigation again, "the third and final attempt; this time, I've managed to round Cape Horn safely and I'm now on my way towards Africa."

She explained: "I'm hoping to succeed in this nonstop round the world attempt by returning to Victoria, BC, in June, having left there on October 22. The Vendée Globe racers, some of whom were rounding the Horn when I did, have mostly passed me by now and go just a touch faster than I do."

Jeanne said she is continually having gear problems on board, many of which, "I've dealt with successfully, but presently my Iridium phone and my wind instrument are both playing dead, and look set to stay that way, despite all my efforts. I also cannot set a full mainsail, due to a mast track problem; that's OK in strong conditions, but slows me down in light winds. Otherwise, all is well on board."

She said the weather is, "just like the Falklands," and is, "a real mix just now of calms and strong winds and seas."

Jeanne asked that her best wishes be sent to all Penguin News readers: "I look forward to re-visiting you sometime; when I'm sailing in 'cruising mode' rather than trying to get all the way around without stopping anywhere."

Interim port for oil FIPASS for fishery

READERS who may have been somewhat confused or even alarmed by the content of a full page advertisement in last week's Penguin News which sought expressions of interest in the building of a port in Stanley harbour may rest easy, according to Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher.

He assured Penguin News this week that what is planned is only intended to be temporary and will be cleared away, when the new port planned for Port William is up and running.

MLA Dick Sawle, who holds the port development portfolio, confirmed to Penguin News that part of the decision by Executive Council to construct a new port in Port William was the wish, in the long term, to remove all oil industry infrastructure from Stanley harbour.

However, recognising that there was likely to be a gap between the completion of the new port and the beginning of the exploitation phase of the developing oil industry, FIG is currently working with Premier Oil on interim port arrangements in Stanley harbour.

MLA Sawle said that this temporary provision was in the hands of the oil industry, but would have to meet the usual planning requirements and was quite separate from other plans being developed by FIG for the ongoing maintenance of FIPASS as a resource for the use of the fishing industry.

Apart from the suggestion made in Premier's advertisement that the temporary oil port development would be located to the east of FIPASS, Mr Fletcher said that there were at the moment no concrete plans in place.

The final design would depend on Premier Oil with whom government was now holding regular meetings.

What the company needed, said Mr Fletcher was a facility of the right scale and complexity to enable them to bring forward the development of the Sea Lion field to the earliest date possible.

Mr Fletcher told Penguin News on Tuesday that FIG will be making public what it calls a 'Programme Definition' relating to the construction of a new port in Port William.

According to Mr Fletcher the aim of this document is to set out the ground strategy for the project and to itemise the individual projects which will need to come together to allow completion of the whole by early 2017, as is planned.

These projects will include the new port itself, the new road and its associated utilities, plus what is intended to happen to FIPASS.

Mr Fletcher said that he thought it was important that government should show people what they were thinking and give some milestones by which progress towards the completion of this project could be judged.

What was planned was major infrastructure which would affect Stanley for the next ten to twenty years and onwards. FIG was hoping, he said, that the document, when completed and released, would also indicate the massive opportunities for local businesses that this project would create.

FM for Camp First phase

THE first phase in providing FM radio to Camp should be completed by September according to Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher.

The provision of FM radio to Camp has been a subject for discussion and grievance for some time.

What provision exists is both limited in range and subject to frequent problems, which it is generally accepted will become terminal with the expected failure of equipment currently located on Mount Maria on West Falklands.

The administration presented a paper to ExCo before Christmas outlining various proposals for the provision of new infrastructure which would permit the roll out of a comprehensive FM radio service to Camp. After consideration, the proposal chosen by ExCo was that of local company KTV Ltd, which will offer three channels across the entirety of the Falkland Islands.

According to Director of Central Services, Simon Fletcher, this will be a three phase development. It is expected that the first phase will be completed by the end of September this year and the final phase by March 2014.

At the moment, Mr Fletcher said that government was focused on getting the details of the contract with KTV Ltd right, but they would be consulting with potential listeners in Camp to find out which two channels, in addition to FIRS, residents would prefer to have available.

Argentine debt

JOURNALIST James K Glassman writes that Argentina's long-running battle to avoid settling its 2001 default may be approaching its end. More than $1 billion is being contested-but much more is at stake.

After the largest sovereign default in history, Argentina offered foreign governments, financial institutions and individual investors a take-it-or-leave-it 25 cents on the dollar for about $100 billion in outstanding debt. Many of those owed money, refused the deal. 76 per cent of creditors accepted the deal, far below the 95 per cent plus that has been the historical norm in negotiated sovereign-debt restructurings. As a result, there are two classes of debt today: 'settled' debt (which was exchanged for new bonds) and unsettled, or 'holdout', debt.

A court decision will soon determine whether investors can count on US law to enforce their contractual rights when they lend money to foreign governments. If they can't, sovereign lending will become a riskier proposition, leading to higher interest rates, higher costs to taxpayers, and a decline in confidence in the global financial system.

Seal given best 'chance for survival'

Feeding time

A YOUNG elephant seal weighing less than half of what he should, and with a nasty bite on his side, was found on Surf Bay last Sunday, but has since been released after veterinary treatment.

Nature would usually have decided his fate but having landed on such a public beach meant mounting concern from the public and conservationists gave him the best chance for survival.

The undersized weaner was taken to the Agriculture Department by Falklands Conservation and visiting locum veterinarian Aniket Sardana (see Two Min- utes) where he took up residence in their oiled seal/penguin station.

The seal's wound, most likely caused by a sea lion, was sutured by veterinarian Sardana who also dosed him with long-acting antibiotics and with help from Sarah Crofts and Mickey Reeves of Falklands Conservation, the undernourished weaner was rehydrated and fed.

Ms Crofts explained he was clearly underweight because his neck was visible and not covered in the rolls of fat usual for a seal pup of his age. A healthy weaner should weigh at least 120kg when they are weaned off and forced to sea, but this little one weighed just 49kg when he was brought in said Ms Crofts.

After a few days of minced fish suppers the seal was released early Wednesday morning in a secret location where it is hoped he will be undisturbed.

Mr Sardana said the experience is a learning curve for the Veterinary Department which usually only treats seals affected directly or indirectly by human activity, such as oil; He said the seal looked good on release and was hopeful he would be well.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

SOME very full days of meetings this week so just a taste of the busy run up to the November election, how four years fly!

The news item saying the Falklands are listed in a US publication's list of the 46 places to visit this year brings a sting in the tail in the form of an article by a journalist who has visited, saying this may be the last chance to see the Islands unspoiled by the oil industry. Unfortunately there is a widely held view that an oil industry will spoil many of the good things about the Falklands. I firmly believe that as long as we retain control that will not happen. However we must be vigilant, particularly of creeping development: an apparently small concession here and there and before we know it, damage is done. I have already seen this in terms of planning where mainly unelected individuals regularly agree details on projects that place us on a slippery slope. While, as I understand it, we should not be fettered by precedents carelessly set, the reality is that once a precedent occurs, fairness and natural justice compel many to feel they have to follow that precedent. Legislation is being reviewed to ensure it is fit for purpose so I hope our planning processes are strong enough and that those who put themselves forward for the Planning and Building Committee have at least the normal quota of spine.

The referendum is only weeks away and we have an unprecedented opportunity to send out a clear message to all fair and open minded people that this is our demonstration of our right to self determination. A 'yes' vote gives that message loud and clear without inhibiting further progress on the way to even more autonomy. If you are a voter who will not be present on the two voting days, do ensure that you have your proxy or postal vote set up by mid February so that you do not miss this opportunity. The size of the turnout is going to be as important as the result.

Legal consequences for cruise ship change of heart in Ushuaia

A COURT case brought on December 28, 2012, against the Governor of Tierra del Fuego, Fabiana Rios and the President of the port authority of the same Argentine Province, Jorge Rodriguez, has begun its progress through the courts, having on January 2, passed to a second stage judge after the initial examining magistrate had considered that there was a case to be considered.

The case, which was brought by a group of ex-Falklands combatants led by Dario Martinez accuses the officials of failing to comply with Argentine Provincial Law, Number 852, known as the 'Gaucho Rivero Law,' which was adopted by Tierra del Fuego in August 2011 and applied against the cruise ships Star Princess and Adonia on February 27 2012, when they were prohibited from entering the port of Ushuaia.

This law, which, after the February 27 action was adopted by four other provinces: Santa Cruz, Chubut, Rio Negro y Buenos Aires, prohibits, "all remaining, mooring, provisioning and logistical operations in provincial territory of vessels carrying British flags or flags of convenience, carrying out tasks related to exploration, drilling or exploitation of natural resources in the Falklands Basin over the Argentine Continental Shelf."

After the application of the Gaucho Rivero law last February, representatives of the tourism businesses on which the economy of Ushuaia depends complained vigorously to the provincial authorities about the loss of revenue caused. Marcelo Lietti of the Ushuaia Chamber of Commerce estimated that the banning of the two ships and the subsequent decision of Seabourn Sojourn to favour the Chilean Puerto Williams rather than Ushuaia, caused a loss of at least 18,000 visitors.

It would appear that these claims were heeded because on December 28, two large cruise ships: Star Princess and Seabourn Sojourn were allowed to dock in Ushuaia without problem. Asked by local media why this was allowed when the Star Princess had been banned in the previous February, the Port Authority President, Mr Rodriguez, said: "I don't know what happened then, but I believe that there was some confusion. I think that it was felt that the Princess Line was English, when it isn't." Because of this assumption, the banning of Star Princess was a mistake. Mr Rodriguez said, though he admitted that no apology had been made to the company. The banning of the Adonia on the other hand fitted all the requirements of the law, "being English-owned, English-flagged, English-crewed and with English passengers."

The Port Authority President is also quoted in the Ushuaia news paper, Diario del Fin del Mundo as saying that there is no "bottom line" which prevents cruise ships from entering the port and that there was a strong desire to arrive there on the part of the cruise companies. He insisted that unlike P&O's Adonis, which will not now be calling at Ushuaia neither the Seabourn Sojourn, which flies the flag of the Bahamas nor the Star Princess, which is Bermuda-flagged, were, "English-flagged, neither were they English-financed, but USA owned."

Clearly the reasons or excuses being offered for this change in policy on the part of the Tierra del Fuego administration was not accepted by the militant activists.

Medal claim

A MAN who helped build Mount Pleasant Airport in 1984 is claiming conditions were so bad at the time he and other workers deserve to be awarded a medal for their work.

Mr Freeman (74) said: "I went out to earn money as I was finding it difficult to find work at home. There were 2,000 people working on the site altogether which is a lot.

"But there was no recognition of the work that was done there."

Mr Freeman claims that Sir Rex Hunt said the workmen should get a medal for what was achieved in the project, which was led by the Laing-Mowlem ARC consortium.

"Sometimes the conditions were bad, often you had to clear the snow away before you started using the machinery.

"All the workmen put their lives at risk, as well as the soldiers," Mr Freeman added.

He has written to Prime Minister David Cameron but so far has had no response.

Phyllis Rendell

IN the January 4 edition of Penguin News on the front page the story noted that Mrs Phyllis Rendell was awarded an OBE. Mrs Rendell in fact received an MBE. My apologies to Mrs Rendell, for the 'promotion', however, if it is any consolation, when the Editor mentioned the mistake to various individuals, their response on the whole was: "well that's what she should have got."

Robathan: Appropriate defence in South Atlantic

THE Brazilian government has criticised, "militarisation," of the South Atlantic as a result of tension between the UK and Argentina over the Falklands, however the British Minister for Defence this week said, "appropriate levels of defensive capabilities," were maintained.

The Brazilian Foreign Minister announced midweek that representatives from 21 African and South American countries (South Atlantic Peace and Cooperation Zone) are debating in Uruguay the consolidation of the South Atlantic as a zone free of arms of mass destruction and, "improper militarisation."

Brazilian Foreign minister Antonio Patriota told South American press "There are decolonisation issues which have yet to reach a definitive solution."

He said that South Atlantic countries had to consolidate, "the image of a zone free," of arms of mass destruction.

The Argentine Deputy Foreign Minister Eduardo Antonio Zuanin has echoed Mr Patriota's sentiments reported Mercopress, saying South Atlantic Peace and Cooperation zone representatives were debating his country's concern over the increase of the military presence in the Malvinas.

Uruguay's Foreign minister Luis Almagro underlined the challenge for the region "when the developed world is in the midst of an unprecedented economic and financial crisis."

"Without peace it is impossible to ensure the economic, social and cultural development of our societies" added Mr Almagro who made a contrast with the North Atlantic: "they have their defence mechanisms and alliances: in the South Atlantic our dynamics should be development and trade."

The VII Ministerial meeting of the South Atlantic Peace and Cooperation Zone was created in 1986 following a UN General Assembly resolution and has only ever held six ministerial meetings, the last of which in Angola in 2007.

For the Montevideo meeting for the first time Defence ministers were also invited. The gathering includes representatives from Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay and from Africa, Angola, Benin, Cape Verde, Cameroon, Congo, Ivory Coast, Gabon, Gambia, Guinea, Equatorial Guinea, Liberia, Namibia, Nigeria, Democratic Republic of Congo, Senegal, South Africa and Togo. Members that missed Montevideo are Guinea Bissau, Saint Tomé and Sierra Leone.

In a British parliament debate on defence also held this week, the Defence Minister Andrew Robathan commented: "the Ministry of Defence keeps force levels in the South Atlantic under constant review to ensure that we retain appropriate levels of defensive capabilities. We retain the ability to reinforce the Falkland Islands should the need arise.

Andrew Robathan

Michael Fabricant MP (Lichfield, Conservative) noted "increased sabre-rattling from President Cristina Kirchner," and drew attention to the Falklands political referendum planned for March 11 asking if the Defence Minister was, "confident that our present armed forces on the Falkland Islands can defend the Islands, and are we capable of quick reinforcement should that be necessary?"

Mr Robathan replied: "We all hope and, indeed, expect that the referendum will reinforce the relationship between Britain and the Falkland Islands. This is, of course, a Falkland Islands Government initiative.

On the ability to defend the Falklands, we have - this is all in the public domain - our Typhoon aircraft, a company of soldiers, a South Atlantic guard ship and, of course, submarines, but we do not comment on where they are to be found.

I am confident that we can defend the islands and we also have Mount Pleasant airfield for immediate reinforcement by air."

Mr Robathan reassured another Member of Parliament that it was, "highly unlikely that the Argentines will invade the Falkland Islands, not least because I understand that there is a clause in Argentina's constitution that specifically excludes invading the Falkland Islands or taking them by force."

He also agreed that Argentina's armed forces were not well equipped, "although one should not be complacent."

Won't fall into the trap

THE recent planning application for an Argentine to erect a large cross on the Airport Road is another attempt by them to get a further foothold in our Islands.

The proposal has been very cleverly designed to include British Airman lost in the 1982 Conflict. This is an attempt to get the sympathy vote but they must think we were born stupid.

The 1999 Agreement allowed them to build a memorial at the Argentine Cemetery at Darwin; it did not permit other memorials to be erected years down the road. It even stirred the Islanders to demonstrate against it.

Just as many predicted, Argentina broke the 1999 agreement and has since placed every obstacle in our path in an attempt to starve us of economic growth.

Their policy aim is to recover the Falklands by whatever means and they publicly state they do not recognise the people that live here and claim we are an implanted people. Yet we as a people are consistently being asked to be nice to them and not to rock the boat.

It is time that the Falkland Islands people together with represented MLAs stood firmly and told the Argentines that if they persist in attempting to blockade our shipping and continue to put pressure on the people by whatever means they will be permanently shut out. Using the British fallen as a way to gain acceptance for this cross is not going to wash with the Islanders. We will not fall into that trap. It will cause immense ill feeling and probable retaliation if allowed to go ahead.

The Falkland Islanders will tell the world in March where we want to be and the Argentines are trying every trick to interfere and this proposal coming just two months before the referendum is another way to cause distraction.

Argentine says don't negotiate

I AM an Argentine citizen living in the UK and I am writing to you regarding the letter my President, Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner, published as an advert in the Guardian and other newspapers.

Please allow me to give you my opinion: I believe as an Argentine citizen that you should NOT open sovereignty talks over islands with her at all.

Unfortunately, I do believe my President is not the right person to do so. I find very embarrassing her attitude and her way of doing politics with you.

And I strongly believe the UK and Argentina can have a good relationship, and might be a matter of focusing on a different subject than The Islands.

Apologies sent like this are not very formal, but somehow I wanted to stand up for myself and a lot of Argentine citizens living in the UK and in Argentina who repudiate her behaviour as a president of a nation.

Big thank you to the Post Office

A HUGE debt of gratitude is owed to the post office staff who delayed the start of their Christmas holiday by collecting and sorting the overseas mail on Christmas Eve. Judging from the queue of people at the post office counter, many a parcel arrived in time for Christmas Day!

Thank you ladies; you showed true Christmas spirit.

Don't forget to vote

I WOULD first like to thank the people of the Falkland Islands for a wonderful experience last November. My wife and I were overwhelmed by the thanks and hospitality shown to us. Thank you Penguin News for our photos, Liz at the TV station for our copies of the DVD, Terence and Sheila at San Carlos and all we met. After 30 years it was very humbling to see that our actions in 1982 were not forgotten.

We hear now of all the noise again coming from Argentina and I hope that everyone eligible to vote in the upcoming referendum will do so. A 50% turnout will give more voice to Argentina while a 100% turnout will silence them on the world stage.

I look forward to returning for a short visit next year.

Thank you all and the best wishes for the New Year.

Zombies in government

IT was cheering to read Ian Hansen's letter last week about designating Camp Roads.

At least we have two Camp MLA's listening to the people in Camp and I strongly agree that there should be a period of consultation with the folk who are going to be most affected by this proposal. I have written to MLA's about designation and not yet received the courtesy of an answer.

The zombies in the Government who want to cram everyone into the same mould and impose this stuff on all freedom loving Campers need to be checked. I hope that the many town residents who like to escape to Camp as well in the summer - specially for the Sports and Christmas period - will add their voice to the opposition to this unnecessary legislation.

It smacks of the 'They do it like this in the UK' syndrome which infuriates most of us only now the zombies want to 'Make all these cussed Campers be like Townies.'

Come on Campers - if you hate this proposal as much as I do - SAY SO loudly and clearly.

Visit Falklands

IN a New York Times article entitled the 46 places to go in 2013 the Falkland Islands is recommended for a visit before the oil industry, "rapidly transforms Stanley's ethnic, economic and social character, driving development in this tiny, eccentric village of about 2,000 year-round residents."

Michael T Luongo comments: "Eight thousand miles from London, the Falkland Islands are a cold, rugged Galapagos-like spot swarming with penguins, seals, whales and other wildlife.

"Over the last few decades, though, politics has trumped nature: more than 30 years since the Falklands War, tensions remain high between Argentina and Britain, especially with vast oil reserves now being explored offshore. The practical Falklanders, though, are moving on, breaking ground this year on a Falkland Islands Museum as part of an overhaul and expansion of the waterfront in the capital, Stanley, along with considering new air routes."

Tribute to Bomber Command Islander

FOLLOWING extensive research by Lyle Craigie-Halkett, nephew of Falkland Islander Lionel Craigie-Halkett, Lyle kindly submitted to Penguin News a fascinating short history of his uncle's brave participation in Bomber Command and subsequent death during WWII.

Lionel Craigie-Halkett was born in Stanley on December 28, 1915. His father was Montague Craigie-Halkett, who was born in Surrey in 1883 and his mother was Ann Robson from Port Louis.

Lyle takes up the story:

Lionel's father, Montague, held several positions in the Falkland Islands Government from JP, Postmaster General to Colonial Secretary. Recent research has revealed that Frederick Craigie-Halkett, who was Montague's father, also served as Colonial Secretary and Governor in the Falklands in the 1880s. There is a memorial plaque in Christ Church Cathedral dedicated to him.

Lionel came to the UK to further his education and then joined the Royal Air Force attaining his pilot's licence in 1937.

When WWII broke out in 1939, Lionel was assigned to Bomber Command. On August 24, 1940 a German bomber, allegedly off course, dropped its load of bombs onto a residential suburb of London. Affronted by this action Winston Churchill assured the British people that bombs would fall on Berlin within 24 hours. The damage was said to be 'minimal' but the psychological effect was enormous. Goering had always assured the German people that 'his' Luftwaffe would prevent that from ever happening.

On Friday August 30, 1940 several bomber aircraft were prepared to fly on a bombing mission over Germany from an airfield not far from Newmarket. One of these aeroplanes was a Wellington, tail number T2559, piloted by Lionel Craigie-Halkett aged 25. The co-pilot was B S Cunyngham age 22. There were also two wireless operators: Sydney J Haldane aged 19 and Arthur B Puzey aged 20, a tail gunner George E Merryweather aged 20 and finally the navigator/observer George H Bainbridge aged 29.

After the Wellington T2559 was loaded with her lethal load of bombs, she took off in company of the other bombers at the recorded local time of 20.48.

The final entry in the Operations Record Book states simply 'After leaving base nothing has been seen or heard of this machine'.

It appears that T2559 was not en route to Berlin, but most likely had orders to drop its bombs on a German airfield. As soon as the bombers were sighted the Germans sent their fighters from the Fliegerhorst (air force base) near

The story of Lionel Craigie-Halkett

Arnhem to intercept, which resulted in an aerial battle above Eastern Gelderland. Three British fighters were brought down in flames and it is thought that 15 British airmen lost their lives. What is known for sure is that a Wellington's gunner brought down a Luftwaffe fighter whose crew of two managed to parachute to safety.

Wellington T2559 had crashed in a field between the Dutch villages of Halle and Zelhem.

Local residents witnessed a large aircraft exploding at about 23.30 (It was later thought that some of the cargo of bombs may have been released at the same time and had fallen to the ground, as unexploded bombs were later found in the fields by both farmers and the Germans).

Very early the following morning a local man, Mr Wisselink, was able to get close to the crashed Wellington as German soldiers were attempting to extract the body of an airman from the wreckage. An officer was overheard to say "Er ist auch ein Soldat" (he's a soldier too, you know). With that they fetched a large sheet to carry the remains away. Later that morning the bodies of the unfortunate Wellington crew were taken by local farmers in a horse drawn cart to the mortuary. This little building (now demolished) was also used as a 'tool shed'.

The local county newspaper 'Graafschapbode' reported that the dreadfully mutilated bodies were laid on a bed of straw and covered over.

The airmen were buried on Monday September 3, 1940. The following was also recorded in the 'Graafschapbode':

'Many people from the vicinity assembled in the local cemetery, including the Burgomaster of Zelhem, his wife and two local vicars.

'A division of the German armed forces under the command of Hauptmann Hanssen presented the Guard of Honour during the ceremony.

'At exactly three o'clock the bodies in simple black wooden coffins were carried by German servicemen. Also six wreaths were carried in the procession.

At the grave side a firing squad stood stiffly to attention under the command of a Feldwebel, and while everything was ready for the ceremony to begin, a German aeroplane appeared and flew over the cemetery in salute to the fallen British airmen.

'Hauptmann Hanssen gave a military salute as each coffin was lowered into the ground and when all six coffins were side by side he requested one minute's silence as a silent tribute.

'In a moving speech Hauptmann Hanssen expressed that the fallen men should not be considered as defeated enemy but as soldiers who had fought bravely for their country. He went on to say that perhaps these fallen warriors would also have parents, wives, children, brothers, sisters and fiancées and it is only natural, and our obligation as soldiers, that we bury these fallen fighters here in foreign soil and far from home. The speaker made reference to the heroic death of these airmen who had made the ultimate sacrifice.

'Three almighty salvos sounded from forty guns as a final salute.

'The Dutch Pastor of Halle said touching words in the German language, "Bei den Herrn ist die Gnade." (There is mercy in the Lord). The ceremony was concluded by the saying of the Lord's Prayer.'

Burials with full military honours were not uncommon in this phase of the war. Propaganda probably played a part as the Germans wanted to demonstrate their best intentions towards the Dutch people. That same afternoon in Giesbeek some British Airmen were also interned with military honours but without the fly past of an aeroplane. As the war progressed less attention was paid to enemy burials.

A local builder from Zelhem made a large wooden cross painted black with the words:

"Hier rusten 6 Engelsche vliegers, gevallen in den nacht van 30-31 Aug."

(Here rest 6 British Airmen who died in the night of August 30/31 1940)

About 1954, six headstones were erected on the grave which are the same as those on British war graves worldwide.

I had always been aware that my uncle had served in the Royal Air Force and had lost his life in action during the Second World War, but practically no details had been passed on. I resolved some-day to try and trace the whereabouts of his final resting place. I quickly found out this was not going to be in one of the enormous war cemeteries that exists in the usual places abroad.

I was spurred on by the release of David Tatham's book, 'The Dictionary of Falklands Biography' in the realisation that the name Craigie-Halkett which was once well known in the Falklands, is now fast fading from memory, like so many other of the old names of our forebears, and also that my son Robert now 46 years old should be able to read a little of our family history.

In some ways it is gratifying to recall how many Kelpers joined in the effort to suppress those events of the Second World War, and can only confirm their resolve to be, and remain British.

I had a lucky breakthrough after meeting some divers from Terschelling. One of them had read somewhere about a small cemetery near the Dutch/German border that had some British airmen buried there. Within a week my Dutch contacts came back to tell me of the whereabouts of the cemetery, and had taken photographs of the grave and cross inscribed with my uncle Lionel's name and those of his air crew.

A few months later, my wife Sylvia and I were able to find the small cemetery and were able to pay our respects. We left a laminated photograph of Lionel at the controls of a Wellington (perhaps the same aircraft) also in the enclosure the Falklands Coat of Arms.

In some respects I was happier to see the grave site in such a small cemetery, about a quarter of the size of Stanley cemetery, rather than just one amongst the many hundreds of similar headstones in the military cemeteries throughout Europe.

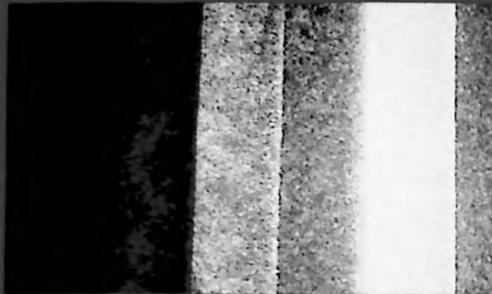

It is gratifying to know that on May 4 each year (Dutch Remembrance Day) the Dutch people hold a service of remembrance and place a wreath on each of the graves for the six British airmen who lost their lives over their little village of Zelhem.

Sadly there was to be another Craigie-Halkett killed as a result of an air disaster (not hostilities). Carol Craigie-Halkett, Lionel's half-sister, lost her life in February 1964, aged 22. She was an air hostess on a Bristol Britannia (British Eagle Airlines) which crashed into a mountain in Switzerland. Carol was not scheduled to be on that flight but took the place of a colleague who had other commitments.

Senior magistrate cross-examined

ON Friday, the Falkland Islands Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley, took the unusual step of allowing himself to be cross-examined by Penguin News.

We began by asking him to explain why he has several times from the bench expressed dissatisfaction with the way our legal system works.

The Senior Magistrate explained that he felt there were a number of problems with relation to the law here, but the principal problem, about which he had expressed concern was about the accessibility that people have as to what the law is. "There's nowhere a clear set of laws that can be guaranteed to be correct and that people can have access to. I don't just mean the public, but lawyers as well," he said.

Mr Gumsley claims that the law of the Falkland Islands requires that there is a Law Commissioner who should check, authorise and sign off the laws on an annual basis, but that this has not been done for many years. A consequence of this is, he said, that when a new set of volumes containing the revised laws of the Falkland Islands arrives, it is hopelessly out of date. There are movements afoot to try and rectify this, Mr Gumsley says, but it has been neglected so long that getting our laws up-to-date will be a long and difficult process.

Asked to illustrate the results of this deficiency, Mr Gumsley said, "there have been a number of contradictions, in simple cases. For example, with the law as it presently stands and the way it's drafted, if a case comes before me as a magistrate, I have to apply the procedures as they were up to 2004. Because of the way the law is drafted, if the same case with the same law comes before the JPs, because I am not here, they have to apply the law of a completely different date; I think it was 1984, but certainly a completely different date. Why this should be, nobody seems to know, but what that means is that technically you may get a different procedure for exactly the same offence, depending on which court it comes to.

"We have a situation where in general terms the law is as in the UK, unless it was specifically changed in the Falklands and updated as the UK law was updated. However, in 2004 the decision was taken to stop incorporating the up-dating of the UK legislation, so, in effect, the law stopped. We are stuck with UK law as of 2004, but the rules that we have to apply in certain cases relate to the laws up to 2013 in the UK and quite clearly they don't make any sense.

Asked whose responsibility it was to make sense of the situation as described, the Senior Magistrate replied: "The responsibility

Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley in his chambers

The man beneath the wig

CALLED to the English Bar in 1989 after studying law at university, Mr Gumsley practised, largely in his native North East of England. After several years of involvement in various areas of the law, he began to specialise in crime and mental health.

After becoming a part-time circuit judge in 2008 Mr Gumsley found that he enjoyed the judicial work. Hoping to do more of it, as well as, "looking to do something that was a bit different," he applied successfully for the Senior Magistrate's post in the Falkland Islands, arriving here at the very end of October, 2011.

He says: "I would like to leave here and be able to say to myself that I did make a difference. I think if I come to the conclusion that I can make a difference and that things are moving, I would like to be part that."

Given that one of the features of his time as Senior Magistrate has been an increase in formality in the court as manifested by an increased appearance of gowns and even wigs, it comes as a surprise to learn that one of the things that Mr Gumsley is passionate about is that the law should be accessible to everyone.

He says of this, "There's a very relaxed culture here, which is in general terms a good thing. It's understandable in a small community, but where you are dealing for having a correct set of laws is the government's, therefore it is the responsibility of the Attorney General's Chambers to have those laws and keep them up-to-date, and the general responsibility of the government in appointing Law Commissioners to do that.

"The courts are separate from the government. It is the job of the government to make the laws. The court's job is to apply the laws as they are made; it doesn't make the law. If the law is not liked or not sensible, the courts tend to get it in the neck, but the courts cannot change the law. All they can do is apply the law as it is."

ions and they come to court, and wish to take action, or to redress the balance, you need the court to say this is how you do it, this is the correct procedure and this is the correct law we have to apply."

with people's rights; where you are finding against them; where you may be locking them up, there's got to be formality.

"I am keen on procedures because I think if you lose those things it becomes just like sitting round the table having a chat, which it isn't and you can't pretend it is.

"I want courts to be more accessible and more understood; I want people to feel as if they can enforce rights here, against whoever. Part of what I want to put across is that the court is independent; it is not the government, it is not big business nor in favour of one person or another. But there is formality to it and that is not going to change."

Being the only judge on the Falklands can be a lonely business, but this is met with a certain humour. Mr Gumsley says that he can silence a pub just by entering it. His social isolation was not helped by the circulation of an email inspired by the Chief Justice, which was meant to help people with the correct form of address to a judge. However, the words, "in court proceedings" were omitted. "Unfortunately," says Mr Gumsley ruefully, "it's now got half the population thinking it's got to call me Milord. I've wandered into Shorty's and been called 'Your Holiness.'

ion we have problems with what might be called social law: family law and criminal law – things that directly affect people, he believes that we have also got trouble with the commercial law and its application. With oil exploitation in prospect, and when commercial enterprises in the Falklands expand, it will be fundamental to maintain a proper legal system.

He said: "In a corporate situation where you might have two companies in dispute with each other or an oil company in dispute with the government, or an individual who has been badly injured while working for an oil company, or any of those situations and they come to court, and wish to take action, or to redress the balance, you need the court to say this is how you do it, this is the correct procedure and this is the correct law we have to apply."

Echoing one of the messages that MLA Barry Elsby brought back from the recent fact-finding trip to Norway, Mr Gumsley warns that if the law has not been sufficiently up-dated when disputes arise between companies, or between individuals and companies, or between companies and government, the courts will need to be equipped with the man power and the laws necessary to handle these situations and reduce either unnecessary delays or prolonged arguments, both of which could prove to be ruinously expensive.

"These corporate cases cost tens, hundreds, millions of pounds in costs and if you've got a clear law, then it's very easy to apply it. The more ambiguity there is in the law or the procedure then that is an excuse for parties just to argue and argue and argue, while costs spiral and you are going to find yourself being tied up. You may have the government arguing against a multi-billion pound venture that has got whole departments of corporate lawyers.

"It's not a complete solution, but to a) know what the law is and b) to remove the ambiguities in the law, is part of the solution. Everybody needs to know what playing field they are on, which reduces the need for people to have to argue about it."

Mr Gumsley has no time for the complacent suggestion that what has worked in the past will continue to work in the future, claiming: "I don't know if it has always worked in the past, but it isn't working in the present and it certainly isn't going to work in the future."

With the Stanley court currently almost fully booked up with cases till mid-April, something which is unprecedented, Mr Gumsley feels that the changes to be addressed in terms of laws and resources are already beginning.

"The days of the Senior Magistrate doing two speeders and sitting behind his desk doing crosswords are gone. That world does not exist any more," he says, though he maintains that the Falkland Islands is still an extremely law-abiding society.

Mr Gumsley believes that the increase, mainly in family and civil cases has arisen because people are becoming more aware of their rights. Although he admits we are nowhere near the prevalent 'blame culture' of the USA or the UK, "when people get to learn about their rights and have confidence to enforce them, that is going to create more challenges and more cases and so it should."

Watch Group enjoy the wild wonders of Weddell

Photographs: Maggie Battersby, Watch group leader, and Martin Beaton, Weddell Island Manager

A SMALL group of young conservationists visited Weddell Island on the weekend. The group travelled courtesy of flights donated by Standard Chartered Bank and as guests of the ever welcoming Jane and Martin Beaton.

The children had a wonderful time experiencing the unique wildlife opportunities that the island offers, including close up encounters with hundreds of ground nesting birds, dolphins, kelp geese, reindeer, Southern sea lion, Gentoo and Magellanic penguins and a family of foxes found digging for insects and basking in the sun.

The youngsters also spent time spotting orchids by the airstrip and picking up fishing vessel rubbish that had blown ashore and wrapped itself on fences.

History

Weddell Island has an interesting history: home to marooned sailors and whalers, and at one time over 23,000 sheep, perhaps the most dynamic of its inhabitants was John Hamilton, who bought the island from the estate of Julie Williams in 1927.

Hamilton introduced animals and birds from his family's estates in Scotland and South America to Weddell, Staats and Tea Island, transporting them on the ketch Penelope, which he bought in South America as the Feuerland from the German explorer and aviator Von Pluchow, but re-named after his daughter.

Shetland ponies, highland cattle, rheas, ostriches, skunks, ibis, parrots and hummingbirds did not survive, but guanaco, Patagonian foxes and sea otters fared better. A small herd of guanaco still live on Staats Island and foxes thrive on Weddell. Surprisingly the staple diet of the foxes seems to be insects and they have adapted ingenious ways of flipping rocks on the coast to find bugs.

Though Hamilton frequently lived on Weddell, the island was managed by the McGill family and subsequently by Bob Ferguson. In 1987 Weddell was sold by Hamilton Estates and bought by Bob and John Ferguson.

In the late 1980's a fire destroyed the magnificent house built by Hamilton, along with its striking carved staircase, South American hardwood panelling and almost all historical records, including an oil painting of the Cutty Sark in Weddell Harbour.

There was an expensive and ineffective effort to remove the fox population made between 1997-1999.

Weddell Island was bought by Mr Richard Visick (of Strachan Visick Ltd) in 2001 and managed by Martin Beaton and Denzil Clausen from 2007. The pair worked hard to repair the settlements infrastructure. Denzil retired three years ago but the island remains in the care of Martin and Jane Beaton.

The Wool Market Report - 11 January, 2013

by Agricultural Advisor Helen Thoday

A GOOD start to the trading year has meant the AWEX is 1,111 a rise of 25 cents from the close of trading in 2012.

Demand and therefore prices rose across all categories of micron, the coarser micron seeing the biggest gains. Over 52,000 bales were put forward for sale with a 96% sale rate.

Compared with the total sales from the last quarter of 2012, demand from China is encouraging as it seems cold weather clothing due to the colder than forecast winter has increased in demand and therefore the textile industry has responded with an increase in demand. Over 58,000 bales are being put forward for sale this week.

Week ending	Pence per kilogram clean for each micron category.

Have Your Say – Future Impact of the Oil & Gas Sector on the Falkland Islands

The Falkland Islands Government has commissioned Regeneris Consulting to lead a study exploring the possible impacts of the oil and gas sector on the economy and society of the Islands over the next 20 years. As part of the study, Stephen Nicol and Stuart Younger from Regeneris would like to speak to a range of people across the Islands to understand your perspectives, your hopes and your concerns about the sector and its impact.

Public Open Forums

Regeneris are holding four open forum meetings in January 2013 to present the ways in which the oil and gas sector may impact on the Islands in the future and to discuss these with you. Please feel free to drop in to any of the meetings, which will take place in:

Stanley – Saturday 26th January, 6pm at the Narrows Bar

Fox Bay – Monday 28th January, 7pm at the Southern Cross Social Club

Goose Green – Wednesday 30th January, 7pm at Goose Green Club

Hope Cottage – Wednesday 30th January, 7pm at Hope Cottage Farm

Refreshments will be provided at all of the meetings.

Focus Groups

We are also inviting people to enrol for one of two focus groups in Stanley, where we will facilitate a more detailed discussion amongst a smaller group of Falkland Islanders about the impacts of oil and gas, and the way that the Falklands might need to develop. Food and drinks will be provided. The timings of the sessions are as follows:

Focus Group for 16-25 Age Group - Tuesday 29th January, 6pm

Focus Group for 25+ Age Group - Thursday 31st January, 6pm

If you would like to register to attend a focus group, please contact Ruth Hurd at Regeneris Consulting by emailing r.hurd@regeneris.co.uk by Monday 21st January, and providing your name, age, gender and telephone number.

Further Information

If you would like to know more about the study or the consultation meetings please contact Stuart Younger at Regeneris Consulting by emailing s.younger@regeneris.co.uk

If you have a query about why the study was commissioned or how it will be used, please contact Jamie Fotheringham at Falkland Islands Government on telephone: 28428, or by email: JFotheringham@sec.gov.fk

Glenn wins the President's Bowl

THE weather and the golf season are warming up nicely and Stanley golf course has never been presented in better condition. Season after season of painstaking work continues to pay off.

Accurate golf is now essential; smaller greens, coupled with the growth in the grass brought on by the warm and damp weather, has made the fairway a cosy and rewarding place to be and the rough increasingly punishing.

The President's Bowl is one of four events held each year that see the winner's name recorded for posterity on our coveted Honours Board.

In fine conditions and the Stableford format, it usually takes a generous handicap and something around the 40 points mark to see your name printed in the President's Bowl column.

Not so on this occasion with most of the field playing to, or around, their handicap.

Eugene Hurley edged out a cluster of players on 35 points to secure third place; second place went to the in-form Kevin Clapp on 36 points. A good round of 72 and 37 points was enough for Glenn Ross to record a surprising win.

The best outward nine went to Sarah Bowles and last week's medal winner Tim Bonner amassed 19 points on the home-ward half.

Darren Wade was closest to the pin on the 12th and Bob Gilbert's laser like precision was in evidence on the 17th.

Wayne Clement powered the longest drive down the 14th fairway.

The next scheduled competition is the SAAS two day event. This promises to be an exciting weekend as for the first time the winner of a two day competition will be the player with the lowest total of the two nett scores, so handicap is included.

As in our Opens, on day two, the golfers will head off in reverse order of play, the leaders after day one in the last group but this time on the nett score. This will give high handicap players, who are usually early risers in our prestigious Stanley Open, an equal chance to sample the exciting atmosphere of playing in the lead or one of the lead groups.

Members are asked to sign in by 13:45 for a 14:00 hrs tee-off. Our Junior Section is also in action this Saturday, when the next Declan Bonner and Iuean Fords are contesting their monthly medal. Juniors are asked to sign in at 10:00 for a 10:15 AM start.

Bermuda Shorts: Glenn Ross and Roy Smith lead the way at the halfway stage of the Island Games Qualifiers, both only one shot ahead of Troyd Bowles.

With only a handful of shots separating most of the top men, it is likely to go down to the wire before the final team of four is known. The golf team is looking to build on their stunning success at the last games excellently hosted in the beautiful Isle of Wight in 2011.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE (PAC)

Due to the resignation of one of the lay appointees, expressions of interest are invited from members of the public who would wish to be considered for appointment to the PAC. The functions of the PAC are set out in the FI Constitution (s.81) and in the Public Accounts Ordinance 2009. Appointment to the PAC will initially be for two years.
The PAC has an important scrutiny role over the public accounts of all government departments and specified bodies to ensure that public funds have been expended properly for the purposes for which they were voted by the Legislative Assembly. In carrying out its functions, the PAC considers, in terms of economy, effectiveness and efficiency, the 'value for money' benefit derived from the expenditure of public money. The PAC may also consider the adequacy of the government's arrangements for the management of financial risk.
This will, therefore, be a major opportunity for individuals appointed to the PAC to make a significant contribution in helping to maintain high standards of public administration and good governance in the Falklands.
Applications should be submitted to the Governor by Monday 28 January 2013 setting out the reasons for the applicant's interest in appointment to the PAC and the skills and experience that the applicant would bring to the job.
Please email GHouse@sec.gov.ik, or send applications to Government House, Stanley.

Herders and hunters gather in South Georgia with Commissioner Haywood.

January start for operation reindeer

THE eradication of reindeer from the island of South Georgia began in early January, with the arrival on the island of a group of Sami herders from the north of Norway and expert marksmen from the Norwegian Nature Inspectorate.

In January 2012, two Norwegian experts joined GSGSSI CEO Martin Collins to assess the feasibility of this exercise. A decision was taken to focus on eradicating reindeer from the smaller Busen area in early 2013.

Mr Collins told Penguin News this week that the eradication team, led by GSGSSI's Environment Officer Jennifer Lee and Carl Erik Kilander from the Norwegian Nature Inspectorate, arrived on South Georgia in early January on the MV Pharos SG. They quickly set about building fences and a corral system on Tonsberg Point, between Stromness and Husvik. Meanwhile two pairs of ground-shooters visited some of the remote outlying areas to shoot the reindeer.

The fencing and corralling is now complete and already over 200 reindeer have been gathered. Ground-shooting operations have been extremely successful, with over 400 reindeer shot from the outlying areas said Mr Collins.

The total number of reindeer appears to be slightly higher than estimated, but it is expected that the Busen area will be cleared of reindeer by the end of February.

The reasons for the exercise

NORWEGIAN whalers introduced the reindeer to two parts of the island in the early 1900's and it is Norwegians who are now tasked with their eradication. The first introduction was 10 animals to Ocean Harbour on the Barff Peninsula in 1911, with further introductions in 1912 and 1925 to the Busen area.

During the whaling era numbers of reindeer were controlled by regular shooting for food and recreation. Following the end of land-based whaling the numbers increased rapidly and there are now estimated to be between 4,000 and 5,000 animals on the island.

Reindeer are voracious grazers on tussac grass, flowering plants such as prickly burr (Acaenagellanica) and lichens. Density of reindeer on the two peninsulas on South Georgia is considerably higher than in their native Scandinavia and the reindeer have had a major impact on the vegetation. Tussac is an important habitat for many breeding birds and the loss of large areas of tussac has had a major impact on seabird populations. The reindeer are currently restricted to three areas by glaciers, but rapid glacial retreat will soon open up new areas to them, so some management action is urgently needed.

In 2011, following a consultation, the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) took the decision to eradicate the reindeer from the island and convened a panel of experts to advise on the best methods.

Key considerations included that the animals were killed as humanely as possible, that some meat could be recovered, that any disturbance to native fauna was minimised and that carcasses could be removed to avoid any impact on the rat eradication project.

Their skills will ensure that the eradication is done as humanely and sensitively as possible."

Mr Collins, who is on the island overseeing the project, said: "The combination of reindeer and rat eradications will help return South Georgia to a more natural state.

"We expect to see a rapid recovery in vegetation, invertebrate populations and, in particular, ground nesting birds."

Defining the way forward

WITH oil expected to start flowing from 2017 onwards, FIG decided last year on the need to review the existing development plan with a view to identifying and 'fast-tracking' those elements of it most relevant to supporting oil development. The stated aim of this decision was, "to allow the planning process to lead rather than react to private developer initiatives."

Admitting that government did not have the in-house resources to do this in the required time frame, the decision was taken to employ a planning consultant to undertake some initial work, primarily information gathering, with a view to the production of what was described in a briefing document as a "high-level infrastructure development plan informing the government what infrastructure is critical in meeting the needs of the oil industry and (most importantly) when it is likely to be required."

The chosen consultant was Mr David Smethurst who has been making a short, but meeting-packed visit to the Falklands this week.

Asked to describe his role with regard to the Falklands, Mr Smethurst said: "The brief is about trying to organise and start off the thinking about planning for infrastructure and the changes that will be coming along. They are already with us but would be further enhanced by the impact of oil and oil revenues." The aim was, he said, to develop as inclusive a process as possible and to identify the critical issues and choices, the priorities for action and, in the overall context, the much wider debate about the future of the Islands as a whole.

At the moment, according to Mr Smethurst, while the Falklands possesses an overarching Islands Plan, it is not very specific in detail in terms of action and neither is the Economic Strategy. "What is needed is 'joined-up' strategic development and the actions that flow from it."

Putting together a programme to which everyone could sign up would not be an easy task, said Mr Smethurst, but he is here to ask the basic questions and start the process.

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

Why should we talk to people who won't talk to us?

As a general thing, so we all tell our kids, talking out problems is good. As someone once said, it is better to 'jaw' than end up maybe going to war with a good chance of ending up dead.

But I ask, would you talk with somebody that with ever increasing persistence was maintaining a claim, even changing the name, of the place where you had your existence?

I say it again, as a general rule talking out problems is good. if the person you talk to is not going to twist and try to deny that you even exist, then you'd feel like a bit of a fool.

If you came home one night, feeling alright till you found a strange man in your bed, or stoking your fire or stroking your cat, who claimed that his place was where you were at, would you make him some tea and stop for a chat?

I'm sure that you wouldn't, and neither would we, who live in the Falklands, surrounded by sea. We know where we are; we came here by choice and though we're not many, we do have a voice which has every right to be heard.

We know where we are and we know who we are. We also know who we are not. To say that we don't would be really absurd, and cause a great deal of bother, like claiming that Cristina K is a bird, whom you'd like to take home to your mother.

(With apologies to Lewis Carrol and everyone else except CFK)

First steps towards oil Sovereign Wealth Fund

£8.274 MILLION has been transferred into the new Oil Development Reserve fund; a first step towards a 'Sovereign Wealth Fund' based on the Norwegian model, it was explained at Wednesday's meeting of the Standing Finance Committee.

The Falkland Islands Government (FIG) was showing a surplus of £3.910 million compared to a revised budget surplus of £3.515 million, a favourable performance of £0.395 million in first six months of the 2012/13 financial year. This appeared less than anticipated, explained the FIG Management Accountant, due to the transfer of oil related taxation receipts to the Reserve.

The Reserve forms a separate part of the Consolidated Fund and the intention is for the first call on this Reserve to be for projects and funding which will encourage the development of oil and ensure that the Falkland Islands is ready for further development.

Under Operating Revenue, taxation revenues for the first two quarters of the year came in at £7.548 million above estimate, predominantly due to higher taxation receipts from oil exploration than were projected in the original budget. Corporation tax receipts from local companies were also higher than anticipated.

The Department of Natural Resources was £119,000 favourable due to revenues at FIPASS in excess of the amounts projected in three areas, primarily due to the oil exploration work underway (berthing fees, water sales and rent).

Health and Education was £450,000 favourable due to un-anticipated Medical Service Tax receipts of £452,000, mainly from individuals working within the oil industry and Central Services was £91,000 favourable based on extra revenue from Stanley Airport due to use by the oil industry, strong stamp sales in the Philatelic Bureau and FIGAS flight revenue, possibly driven by increased traffic relating to the 30th anniversary of the 1982 war.

FIG operating expenditure was around £1.1 million favourable and under Capital Expenditure, capital schemes were currently behind schedule by £5.853 million. This was described as partially down to highways projects, however, spend was expected to accelerate in the second half of the year. Infrastructure development was also behind schedule (primarily at Sapper Hill) however, this position was also expected to recover later in the year.

Falklands Island to host February CPA

THE Falkland Islands will host the 43rd British Islands and Mediterranean Region (BIMR) Annual Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA) from February 11 to 15, 2013.

The BIMR is made up of branches from Alderney, Guernsey, Jersey, Isle of Man, Scotland, Wales, Northern Ireland, CPA UK, St Helena, Cyprus, Malta and the Falkland Islands.

This is the second time the Falkland Islands has hosted the conference.

A total of 37 delegates are expected. Representatives from Canada and Anguilla will observe. The delegate's respective branches meet travel costs.

The official arrival date for delegates, invited observers and guest speakers is Monday February 11, with departure on Friday February 15.

However, some delegations have chosen to arrive early, on Saturday February 9, in order to have the opportunity to explore the Islands further.

The theme of the two-day conference (February 12 to 13) is 'Self-Determination and its role in Self Governance and Devolution'. The Opening Ceremony will include performances by children from both the Infant and Junior School and Community School.

New computer suite for IJS

STAFF at the Infant and Junior School are looking forward to problem free IT lessons after the suite was revamped over the Christmas holidays.

Head teacher of IJS/CE Tom Hill said, "the legendary woodworking skills of Mr Willie Bowles and the information technology know how of Mr Zane Hirtle came together to tackle the problem of how to fit an ever increasing number of children into the same space, and their solution has really impressed the children."

The new IT suite provides a better organised learning space for students and Mr Bowles and Mr Hirtle worked through the holiday to get the vibrant and modern suite ready for the childrens' return this week.

Visit from Republican congressman

REPUBLICAN Congressman Thomas Petri will visit the Falkland Islands between January 28 and February 2 accompanied by a group of congressional staff members.

Congressman Petri represents Wisconsin's 6th Congressional District, and is serving his seventeenth term in the US House of Representatives.

First elected in April 1979, Congressman Petri has been returned to office every two years since. He is a current member of both the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and the Committee on Education and the Workforce. He is also a current member and former Chairman of the House British-American Parliamentary Group, an official organisation formed to strengthen relations with the British Parliament.

During their stay, they will be meeting with members of the Legislative Assembly and senior Falkland Islands Government officers, as well as Tourist Board staff and members of the Chamber of Commerce. They will experience Sea Lion Island for a night, and visit the schools and other government departments.

This visit follows on from the very successful visit of Republican congressman Jim Sensenbrenner last year said a spokesperson for Gilbert House.

1914 commemoration committee formed

FOLLOWING on from the initiative of Mensun Bound introduced at a meeting held in the Parish Hall some weeks ago, a 1914 Committee has now been formed to organise the commemoration of the Battles of Coronel and the Falklands.

On the evening of Sunday January 20, some twenty interested people met in the Parish Hall under the chairmanship of Phyl Rendell.

Apart from agreeing the name of the new committee and asking Norman Clark to supervise the design of a logo incorporating the map of the Falklands and the ensigns of the Royal and Imperial German navies, a number of other proposals were listed, including a museum exhibit, the production of an informative good quality brochure and a web page.

With four MLAs attending both meetings held so far, the Committee noted that there was excellent FIG support for the commemoration. This would be needed for funding and for some of the actions planned such as an invitation to the German Navy to participate in the commemoration.

Depending on available funds, special guests suggested included Admiral Sturdee's descendant, the current Graf von Spee, the Mayor of Coronel and senior members of the British and German navies. It was proposed that writing, art and poetry competitions should be held in the two Stanley schools, with prizes to be awarded by the special guests.

A silent black and white film depicting the Battle of the Falklands is still in existence and all members supported a proposal that it should be acquired, if possible, for screening during the week of the commemoration. Mensun Bound was also tasked to discuss a possible Falklands themed documentary on the two battles with producer Matthew Worman.

The date of the Committee's next meeting, to which all are invited, was agreed to be Sunday March 21 at 5.30pm in the Parish Hall.

Further protection for South Georgia sea life

THE Government of South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) has announced the addition of "extra spatial and temporal protection," to the existing South Georgia and South Sandwich Islands Marine Protected Area (SGSSI MPA).

A spokesperson for SGSSI said the additional measures will add extra protection to the SGSSI MPA, which was created in February 2012 and covers over 1 million km² of the highly productive waters around the islands.

As part of a long-term management and conservation strategy for the Territory this will add to the existing no-take zones and establish:

- A seasonal closure of the fishery for Antarctic krill (from November 1 until March 31) to avoid competition with krill eating predators (particularly penguins and fur seals) during the breeding season;
- Twelve nautical mile pelagic no-take zones around each of the South Sandwich Islands, protecting 18,042km², including important feeding areas of Chinstrap and Adelle penguins;

- A ban on all bottom fishing deeper than 2250m, which covers 920,000km² (an area similar to the size of Spain), to protect deep-water habitats;

- Additional closed areas to protect sensitive benthic fauna and provide refuge for the highly valuable Patagonian toothfish, covering 12,662km² (approximately the size of Northern Ireland).

Fishing shallower than 700m was already prohibited, meaning that only 83,500km² (8 per cent) of the sea-floor is available for bottom fishing. Bottom trawling was already banned throughout the MPA.

This ensures the waters around South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands remain amongst the best managed in the world.

PICTURED above is Stuart Younger of Regeneris Consulting, the Manchester-based company chosen by FIG to lead a study exploring the possible impacts of the oil and gas sector on the economy and society of the Islands over the next 20 years. Stuart Younger and Stephen Nicol also from Regeneris are in the Islands and hoping to speak to a range of people to understand their perspectives, hopes and concerns about the sector and its impact.

The suggested timetables for a series of planned open meetings can be found on Page 6.

Stuart and Stephen are also hoping to recruit ten or so people for each of two focus groups: one representing the 16-25 age group and the other of those over 25. Ideally they are hoping for a good spread of interests, occupations, gender and ages in each of these groups. Details for joining one of these groups can also be found on page 6.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

ONE of the subjects raised at this month's public meeting was road designation. Draft legislation will shortly be produced for consultation, and some of the outstanding issues investigated. I have no doubt that with good will and common sense a solution can be found which solves the insurance problem without causing the massive inconvenience to camp residents feared by some. The question of enforcement was raised and it was pointed out, correctly, that we are a largely law abiding society. This was clearly demonstrated at the time the smoking ban was introduced to a chorus of 'how will it be policed?' As we now know it is working well and very few people regard smoking indoors as acceptable, socially or in terms of health.

Planning, as I mentioned last week, will take on even greater importance as the oil industry develops. We need a system that can respond quickly to their needs and one that preserves the attractive aspects of our town. This is not just as a photogenic subject for visitors, but more importantly as a place where we can enjoy a good quality of life. Many of us have travelled widely and seen the consequences of overdevelopment and inconsiderate planning. While we can all point to things that have been done badly here in the past, there is no reason to emulate that in the future.

Among other meetings this week I have one with the remuneration panel and will emphasise that the MLA role is becoming pretty much a full time one. We are taking on more responsibility and fitting in extra overseas visits to the point where a holiday looks like a distant fantasy if we are not to pass those responsibilities to an already busy colleague.

Finally, thinking about the referendum, a show of unity and determination may not sway our nearest neighbours but cannot be ignored by others. Attempts to muddy the waters would play straight into the hands of those who want to colonise our country, but a good turnout with a decisive vote can discredit their nonsensical claims in the eyes of others.

OBE for Falklands friend Guy

FORMER British Army Colonel Guy Levene, a face well known to many Islanders from his time spent as Assistant Chief of Staff in the Falklands (as J4 Logistics working alongside Falkland authorities developing island infrastructure) was awarded an OBE at Buckingham Palace on November 9, 2012, having been nominated in the Queen's Birthday Honours List.

Guy was honoured for his work in developing peacekeeping in Eastern Africa, his wife Yvonne told Penguin News this week. Yvonne and the couple's sons Max and Billy also lived in the Islands during Guy's posting from April 2005 until September 2007. Yvonne said Guy, having taken redundancy from the Army last March, is currently, "working hard at organising the build of an eco-tourist lodge in Ethiopia (see www.balemountainlodge.com) and Facebook page 'Bale mountain Lodge' which includes regular blogs by Yvonne on the progress of the lodge and life in general.

His company Jember Ltd, of which Guy is Managing Director, "aims to bring the beauty of Ethiopia to a wider audience whilst promoting sound conservation principles in order to reduce the impact of negative activities inside the Ethiopian National Parks."

The couple's oldest son Billy has been working in Liberia but has just started a new job in Ethiopia, as an Exploration Geologist, having been inspired by the geological activity within the Falkland Islands.

Max started at University of East Anglia in Norwich in September studying Business Economics.

Max suffered a serious accident whilst playing rugby after leaving the Falklands and is confined to a wheelchair. However, now at University Yvonne says he is, "thoroughly enjoying being with young people again."

Max was a keen horse rider during his time living in the Falklands, having learnt to ride with Bobby Short at Wineglass Station, he was proud to wear Bobby's colours for the Junior Cup in the 2007 Boxing Day Races, and also enjoyed riding at Shallow Bay.

Yvonne commented, "We all thoroughly enjoyed our time in the Islands and hope to be back some day."

Negative hydatid

SENIOR Veterinarian Steve Pointing reports that results of the most recent dog hydatid survey have proved negative, apart from one outstanding result, which should be received shortly. This means not including that particular result, none of the dogs tested had an adult hydatid tapeworm in their intestine in August this year.

Eight positive results showed in a previous testing in September 2010, three of which were pet dogs living in Stanley, the remainder farm dogs. However, between the time of testing and receiving the results six months later, the decision was made in July 2011 to change dosing intervals of all dogs in the Islands from six weeks to every four weeks.

"This increased frequency of dosing appears to have had the desired effect," said Mr Pointing.

Dosing will not cease as a result but may happen at some stage in the future he said. From January to June 2013 dosing will continue to be every four weeks, however, from July to December 2013 dosing will reduce to every six weeks.

All dog owners are responsible for worming their own pets but are asked to please call the Veterinary Office on telephone 27366 and confirm it had been done each time.

Inquest into South Georgia death re-opens

AN inquest was re-opened on Monday in the Coroner's Court into the death in South Georgia last January of Mrs Eileen Madden Larrimore.

Re-opening the inquest, which had its first hearing on January 13, 2012, Coroner Mr Carl Gumsley said that it was not a trial and its sole purpose was to establish the facts surrounding Mrs Larrimore's death.

At the time of her death, Mrs Larrimore, who was a retired Lieutenant Colonel in the United States army, was travelling with her husband on the cruise ship Clipper Adventurer, chartered by the specialist tour operator, Zegram Expeditions. The event which led to her death occurred during a hike with other passengers and expedition staff from Leith Harbour to Stromness. This trek, which is quite frequently undertaken by passengers on cruise ships of this type, replicates the last stage of Sir Ernest Shackleton's famous crossing of South Georgia in 1916.

Due to the difficulties involved in contacting witnesses, including medical experts from around the world, it is expected that the inquest will run for two weeks. Among the persons present in court who were listed by the Coroner as "interested persons" and therefore allowed to ask questions were a legal team from Zegram Expeditions led by Mr Forlin QC, the Falkland Islands Attorney General Mr Mark Lewis, who is also Attorney General for South Georgia and Mr Richard McKee, also representing the Government of South Georgia.

HMS Protector guides Fram

REGULAR Falklands visitor Norwegian cruise liner MV Fram, at risk of becoming trapped in thick ice off the coast of Antarctica was guided to safety by the Royal Navy in a two-hour operation last week.

Ice breaker HMS Protector broke through the densely packed ice which had surrounded the MV Fram, blocking her path and trapping the bow, as she carried passengers through the Antarctic Sound.

The cruise vessel with 202 passengers had been following the patrol ship through the gaps in the pack ice when she was surrounded by a number of fast moving floes.

HMS Protector immediately turned back to help, approaching the Fram from astern and breaking up the ice - which was up to four metres thick. Taking just over two hours at speeds of just two knots, the Fram was eventually released and led to safety.

Fortress book 'teaching a thing or two in Argentina'

FORTRESS Falklands, Graham Bound's newest book on the subject of the Falkland Islands has been published in Spanish in Uruguay, allowing Argentines to "learn a thing or two that might surprise them," Graham told Penguin News this week.

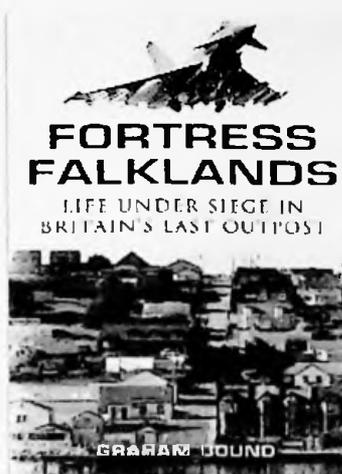

Gustavo Guida Lansot, Director of Siglo Comunicacion and a Doctor in Veterinary Medicine, who has visited the Falklands in the past and knew Graham personally, took up the project of releasing the book in South America after the pair had communicated last year.

Gustavo, who attempted, but failed, to establish an airlink between Stanley and Montevideo in 1992 said having heard of the book, "I asked for the book. I received it, enjoyed it" and told him that I was interested in the subject.

"The next step was to make an agreement with Pen & Sword publishers in order to have the exclusive rights to make the Spanish version and commercialisation in Argentina, Chile and Uruguay.

"We obtained it and finally last week the book was ready and we made the first distribution in Punta del Este bookshops."

Graham commented, "I'm very pleased about this development as it reaches a whole new readership for me, and one that has a natural interest in the Falklands. I hope that through publication in Uruguay in Spanish it will reach a good number of Argentines, which is important."

Now available in South America

He said the book was an attempt to show the Falklands as they are today, "in all their complexity, which is a million miles away from the way that the Argentine government would portray them. I think that Islanders emerge from the book as forward thinking, confident, and dynamic, notwithstanding the challenges they face. And because it is a piece of independent journalism, I think it's believable."

1. What is your most prized possession? My earphones; music helps me escape to wherever I want to be when I need to be lost

2. What is the best piece of advice you have ever been given? Anonymity is impossible in the Falklands; don't even try. This was said to me on my first day working here and has been proven true almost everyday since

3. If you had a motto, what would it be? My father warned me about men and booze, he said nothing about women and cocaine

4. What in your everyday life drives you crazy? At present it's my housemate without a doubt but he will have left by the time this is printed

5. What is your nickname and why? Yam. As a kid I always wanted to go on my brother's motorbike but couldn't say Yamaha. I'm told I tortured him by always asking to go out on the Yam and it stuck. I still love motorbikes

6. If you could travel anywhere in the world, where would it be? I'm pretty well travelled but The Giant's Causeway on the Antrim coast in Ireland is my most favourite place in the whole world. It's mystical, romantic and magical in just the right proportions. The legend is that it was created by the giant Fionn Mac Cumhaill and my son is named Fionn after him

7. What song makes you feel happy when you hear it? A new friend has recently introduced me to the Paloma Faith album and I'm falling in love with it

8. What would people be surprised to learn about you? I'm told there's nothing hidden about me. It's all out there to love or not

9. What's the best book or movie you have read/watched recently? The Shawshank Redemption which I watched down here recently and remembered just how good it is. It reminds me of my nephew when he was a young boy, long before he ever did his degree in film studies

10. What is the one, single food that you would never give up? Being a true Irish woman that would have to be spuds. I love potatoes in all forms

Eileen Best is here for five months working at the Social Services Department. She has a partner and a three year old son back in Stockport where she has lived for about 26 years. Eileen said she has been having a "whale of a time," since she landed in December, "The girls from the office have been terrific to work with and have shown me loads of the sights of your beautiful islands for which I will always be grateful."

Have Your Say – Future Impact of the Oil & Gas Sector on the Falkland Islands

The Falkland Islands Government has commissioned Regeneris Consulting to lead a study exploring the possible impacts of the oil and gas sector on the economy and society of the Islands over the next 20 years. As part of the study, Stephen Nicol and Stuart Younger from Regeneris would like to speak to a range of people across the Islands to understand your perspectives, your hopes and your concerns about the sector and its impact.

Public Open Forums

Regeneris are holding four open forum meetings in January 2013 to present the ways in which the oil and gas sector may impact on the Islands in the future and to discuss these with you. Please feel free to drop in to any of the meetings, which will take place in:

Stanley – Saturday 26th January, 6pm at the Narrows Bar

Fox Bay – Monday 28th January, 7pm at the Southern Cross Social Club

Hope Cottage – Wednesday 30th January, 7pm at Hope Cottage Farm

Refreshments will be provided at all of the meetings.

Focus Groups

We are also inviting people to enrol for one of two focus groups in Stanley, where we will facilitate a more detailed discussion amongst a smaller group of Falkland Islanders about the impacts of oil and gas, and the way that the Falklands might need to develop. Food and drinks will be provided. The timings of the sessions are as follows:

Focus Group for 16-25 Age Group - Tuesday 29th January, 6pm

Focus Group for 25+ Age Group - Thursday 31st January, 6pm

If you would like to register to attend a focus group, please contact Ruth Hurd at Regeneris Consulting by emailing r.hurd@regeneris.co.uk by Monday 28th January, and providing your name, age, gender and telephone number.

Further Information

If you would like to know more about the study or the consultation meetings please contact Stuart Younger at Regeneris Consulting by emailing s.younger@regeneris.co.uk

If you have a query about why the study was commissioned or how it will be used, please contact Jamie Fotheringham at Falkland Islands Government on telephone: 28428, or by email: JFotheringham@sec.gov.fk

Dir Ed role Board not consulted

I AM presently the Chair of the School Managers Committee and as their representative sit on the Education Board. I am feeling extremely disappointed and shocked that I have to learn by listening to the 6pm news that the current Head Teacher of FICS and Deputy Director of Education is now to fulfil the role of Director of Education. I wonder how our professional staff feel on hearing the three top positions in the Senior School, being the Director, Assistant Director and Head are all the same person. And I wonder how our incumbent feels having no professional support and as a family man having to work the hours to do three jobs! How come the Board didn't even know about this?

For one thing I find it amazing that at the last two Board meetings we have been told that because of the lack of recruitment for a director the interim fix is "being discussed internally" ie the Board is left out of any discussion or decision. It leaves me thinking why have a board or a managers committee if somehow, somewhere else in government the decision is being made and we are as a committee and board left in the dark? I for one find this unacceptable. I would like to know where it is being discussed and why this is happening? Maybe it was the same people who made the decision to combine the Directors of Health and Education in the first place. I am wondering if the Board were side stepped then! Please reassure me HR that in the recruitment process for a new Director of Education, there will be a senior person on the decision panel from the education sector here. If not, there should be?

Weddell fox control success

AT the risk of appearing like sour grapes from a previous owner (the very reason why I've declined to comment in the past) I feel that some recent comments in Penguin News and on FITV merit correcting.

Firstly, there never was a 'magnificent house built by Hamilton', although a high quality house, with trellis work fences etc was taken to Weddell Is, but was never built. The house that burned down on 25th April 1989 was a large rambling building that had many additions over the years. It did include some of the materials destined for the new house, which were used on many other buildings. There was no 'striking carved staircase'.

of Weddell seem to have fallen into a trap that the Patagonian foxes, which are not indigenous to the Falkland Is, are not creating any harm to the wildlife. I wouldn't expect PN to print the horrific photos that I put in the WoolPress many years ago, showing young lambs still walking around with their faces, including jaw and tongue, bitten off and they just staggered around until they died or we found them.

I will however deal with some facts, as before we carried out baiting of the foxes with a very target specific bait, we carried out a lot of research with much assistance from the DoA. The foxes eat a lot more than just insects, in fact they eat whatever they can get hold of, from rats, to lambs and sheep to many small birds and eggs. This evidence will still be on record.

It's logical when you consider it – there is nothing to protect birds or their eggs from fox predation as there are no naturally occurring trees in the Falklands.

The baiting was expensive, but less so than shooting and trapping and fencing, and was very successful – with 95 per cent + of foxes removed from the Loop Head / Tern Hill areas and about 80 per cent from all other parts of the island. (There are effective systems to gauge the number of foxes as provided by the company in Australia that assisted us). Many thanks to Paul Robertson for his invaluable assistance during this period.

On a practical front, apart from the lambing percentage increasing, an unexpected and very welcome result was that we saw many bird chicks running around for the first time that we and older people can remember, plus the nests with eggs in, including Upland Geese nests and goslings, these were unheard of.

We invited Falklands Conservation out during this period of fox control, but only the Dept of Agriculture, along with FIDC who kindly provided funding, were interested.

Lastly, if I recall correctly, a condition (of not having to repay the subsidy?) that the new owners accepted was to continue the fox control using the baits. I understand this soon stopped, and the entire island is now covered with foxes again. I also assume that people living and visiting there no longer see the young birds and their nests again, so one does wonder about their ideals in terms of maintaining the 'natural' habitat balance at Weddell?

Drain on Brit tax payers

HERE in the UK, little attention is paid to the Falklands dispute in general, however people's sympathy and patience towards the Falklands is starting to wear thin.

The recent census results showed an ordinarily resident 'Falkland Islander' population of 1973 (from a total resident population of 2563. In addition there are approximately 2000 military and civilian personnel based at the permanent military garrison. This makes an average ratio of one soldier to every two Falkland Islanders. You enjoy a high standard of living and your islands are completely self-governing and self-sufficient. The only two areas of support that we (the UK) kindly provide you are defence and foreign affairs. The cost of providing defence to the islands is currently £61m (2012-13) which is set to rise by £2m each year. This is more than £30,000 per Islander.

The most shocking fact is that this military expense is being entirely born by the UK taxpayer with not one single penny being contributed back to the UK treasury by Falkland Islanders! Yes – it is official – despite an average salary of £20,000, a GDP of £75m, and a top income tax rate of 26 per cent – you enjoy the defence benefits provided by the UK taxpayer without contributing to UK PLe at all!

And, to add insult to injury from all of the above, and despite the sacrifices of UK soldiers in the 1982 conflict, in the recent census fewer than one thirds of the Falkland Islanders identified as British – 29 per cent. 71 per cent stated their national identity as 'Falkland Islander'.

So, of course it is understandable you want to remain British, as no doubt the forthcoming referendum will prove. After all, why wouldn't you want to be British if you are living a good life, with low taxes (compared to us in the UK), and receiving all the benefits and protections of being linked to the UK, but yet not paying for it, or not even living here!

In these times of austerity in the UK when British people (people from Britain!) are struggling to make ends meet, we are questioning why we are subsidising some islands 8700 miles away from Britain, which is also causing a strain in our relations with South American nations, notwithstanding Argentina. If you really do love being British and love reaping the benefits of receiving our money, then you should all do the right thing and move to BRITAIN!

Or, declare your independence and become a proud, sovereign nation – and use your GDP to fund your own defence!

Thanks from SAMA (82)

AS one of the organisers at this end I know how much time and effort went into the organisation of the pilgrimage as a whole.

So many people helped make the visit the outstanding success it was that it would be impossible to mention them all by name, however special mention must be made of the Pilgrimage Committee so ably headed by Gary Clement. I know that he personally put in an extraordinary amount of time and effort at a time when he was not in the best of health. So thank you Gary for all your hard work.

No words can adequately express our heartfelt thanks for this extraordinarily successful visit. It proved to be a most moving occasion.

As you know this was the first visit back to the Islands for most of the veterans. The way in which the Islanders opened up their homes (and hearts) to us is a memory which we will cherish forever. Many new friendships were formed which will I am sure last for a very long time.

Neglected Laws

AN enlightening article last week by John Fowler on Senior Magistrate Cross-examined. Mr Gumsley has demonstrated the courage of his convictions and is a bold public officer to criticise FIG policy on the basis that if he's right it must be FIG policy not to appoint a Law Commissioner and not to have up-to-date laws. There is a set of revised law books in the public library but there is no health warning to indicate they are not current or complete. Perhaps they should be displayed in the fiction section! With the multi-million pound surpluses of recent years there are clearly the means for ways but what appears to be lacking is the will.

This also applies to other projects which are badly needed to improve certain public services and move our basic infrastructure closer to first world standards. Time to move out of low range and engage a higher gear. It might also be time to consider the reintroduction of the morale boosting best value, and continuous improvement towards excellence initiatives promoted by the former and good chief executives Michael Blanch and Chris Simpkins respectively.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

FOUR weeks of rain have caused havoc on our badly drained borders and also caused the grass to become almost as large as tussock bogs, while the chickweed has grown to a mammoth size.

Up until now my husband has been my 'mechanical gardener' operating the mower or rotavator with equal panache. Now he has proved himself a great weeder as well.

His worries that he might lift out precious plants were groundless and frankly any plants not cleaned soon would die anyway. Nevertheless, there are still a couple of borders to be cleaned; this is a bit unusual at this time of year as normally the 'plant patrols' lead to many of the weeds being pulled at the same time. That, of course, did not happen over December, and boy are we seeing the results now.

The carrots meanwhile have also put on quite a spurt of growth as indeed have all the other root vegetables. We cannot even begin to use up all the radishes! Most of the carrots have now had their first thinning though, leaving them a respectable half inch or so apart and the job will continue with removing every second one as we need them until they are about three inches apart later on in the season.

The parsnips are being treated in the same way, while the other bigger, root vegetables get bigger spaces between them. At the moment that would be about three inches for turnips and swedes, though they will need a lot more space later on.

Strawberries are sending out lots of runners now; I'm going to remove and plant some of the runners in a seed tray to root them and then cut the rest off. They are stealing the plants' strength and will lessen the amount of strawberries we will get from each plant. Besides, lots more runners will be produced before the fruiting season ends.

This is a good time to take cuttings of some shrubs and especially of evergreen ones and so I have been potting up cuttings of hardy Fuchsias, Escallomias, Olearias (New Zealand Daisy Bush), shrubby Potentillas, Honeysuckle and anything else that comes to hand (or should I say, came off in my hand) during weeding. A few things will not root however hard you try. For me that failure is in growing Eucalyptus from cuttings, however, they grow so well from seed, why bother?

My family and friends gave me garden vouchers for both Christmas and my birthday a few days later, and so, very happily, I went to the Garden Centre to pester Jan with a view to checking out their tunnels and spending my vouchers. As it happens, I didn't need to bother her that time as new plants were already on display.

Among the goodies I grabbed was a small Azalia, a not so small Ceanothus (Californian lilac) some tree ferns which are something I have always wanted to try, and the list goes on and on.

But what stands out most for me at the moment, as it is flowering, is the 'Royal Red' Buddleia; what a beauty! Over time with seed grown specimens and cuttings from friends I have collected quite a few different ones.

These are usually in shades of lilac or purple, but my fascination with these bone hardy shrubs started when the Garden Centre was selling a pink one. I have that to this day and, with the help of cuttings, have been able to grow it in a couple of places. It's such a delicate colour for such a tough shrub; these are the shrubs that grow wild and untrimmed, and therefore can look unsightly, close to most train stops in England. Our conditions are so different that they don't even self-seed in cultivated soil let alone in the wild. A trim in Spring keeps them growing beautifully and producing flowers similar to lilacs in bunches that are just as large. They are not called 'butterfly bushes' for nothing; their sweet scent brings any butterflies in the area to our garden very quickly. It is a beautiful sight. However, as I still have vouchers to spend I will have to go back for more 'goodies' once I have finished tidying up here; quite an incentive.

The tomatoes, given a bit more sunlight at last, are starting to colour up. Their leaves with the constant changes of temperature don't look particularly pretty so I have been cutting a few off, just the worst ones, and in some cases only the tips as plants need to take in oxygen through their leaves.

I guess it is time to put out those dahlia plants that I grew from cuttings earlier in the season. The very unpredictable weather has put me off from doing this so far but, if they are ever going to stretch out their roots and give us their glorious flowers, I must put them in the ground and fingers crossed that there isn't a frost just lurking and waiting for such a move.

There's masses of wildlife in the garden at the moment. It is such a pleasure to watch the many different little birds flitting around. Fortunately they are pretty wise to the ways of the world and our cats, which are pretty elderly now, have realised the birds all move too fast for them. As such we are able to watch them making the best of the bushes and the red-hot-pokers and other flowers, in peace.

The Wool Market Report - 17 January, 2013

by Agricultural Advisor Helen Thoday

The AWEX ended this week at AU$1,150 a rise of 39 cents. A total of 58,189 bales were offered this week, with a clearance of 91.7%.

The demand for mid-micron Merino fleece, which has been the focus of Chinese buyers recently, has decreased slightly this week, whereas interest in finer microns has increased and skirtings has remained the same.

The global textile market is anticipated to have a slow recovery from its recent decrease. With anticipated dips in prices occurring over the months ahead, they are likely to be short-term and shouldn't return the market back to its recent decrease.

Week ending	Pence per kilogram clean for each micron category.

Top temperatures on sun and sea Sunday

WITH the maximum temperature reaching 25.4 C on Sunday, the warmest this summer and the third highest on record (records began in 1987) a cold wet Christmas was quickly forgotten as Stanley's population took to Surf Bay or headed for barbecue venues in Camp. This was echoed by those farmers not confined to the shearing shed, with young and older alike leaping into harbours and creeks.

According to Joanna Forrest at the Meteorological Office at Mount Pleasant the highest recorded temperature for this time of year was a massive 29.2 C, on January 22, 1992. The second highest temperature on record (26.0 C) was experienced last year on January 9.

There were 13.7 hours of sunshine on Sunday, which is higher than the average daily for the month, which is 7.4 hours, said Joanna.

Overnight temperatures dropped to 12.9 C, which is the fifth warmest on record for January. This temperature was also reached on the night of January 11 this year, and those two nights were the warmest this summer.

Our thanks to willing photographers who provided Penguin News with images of an unforgettable summer day.

Wayne wins the SAAS two day nett challenge

EIGHTEEN players signed in for a weekend of golf that promised much and delivered a bounty of superb golf and glorious weather.

The SAAS two day nett challenge has been eagerly anticipated and is now a certain favourite for next season.

Nett 65 was the lead score after day one, with Kevin Clapp, Richard Bonner and Wayne Clement securing berths in the leading group, while hovering nearby was the group containing five time Open champion Troyd Bowles, star Declan Bonner and an Irishman.

Declan would shoot a solid back nine on day two to secure third place.

As so often is the case, the par 5 18th 'Hunts Home' would determine the weekend's winner.

Experiencing the pressure of the lead group for the first time was rookie Richard Bonner, he played steadily down the stretch and was unlucky to see his chip to the 18th green snag on the fringe, an ounce more and the ball would have released right up to the hole. This left Wayne Clement with two putts from seven feet to secure the win on an aggregate nett score of 131 just one shot clear of Richard.

The best gross score over the weekend went to Troyd with a solid 74 on day one and a superb 72 on day two.

Bob Gilbert took the prize for the best nett on day two and Kevin won the prize for day one.

Other highlights were the 72 shot on day two by Roy Smith and Kevin Clapp's audition for the Tom Daley show.

Next week the club hosts two matches, on Saturday the Argos Ltd with a later than usual tee time of 2:30, this is to allow as many golfers to play as possible, please sign in by 2:15 and the format for this event is Stableford.

On Sunday it will be Captains Day, format has yet to be decided. The Club wishes to thank Eugene Hurley and all at SAAS for hosting an excellent weekend of golf.

Bermuda Shorts: The Port Royal Golf Course is a 6,842 yard monster. It is the host venue for the Grand Slam of golf. This is the annual shoot-out between the four major winners. A course that challenges and frustrates these incredible superstars is doubtless going to humble and destroy the ordinary golfer.

So why put yourself through it? I expect everyone asked would propose a different answer but the essence of it could be something to do with, when visiting the fun fair, the lengthy queue is seen at the rollercoaster and there is a lack of one at the carousel.

The Bermudans have posted a map on their excellent website showing the worldwide locations of the visiting islands and all are pin pointed with accuracy, except for one, the Falkland Islands are shown in the North Atlantic adjacent to a large arrow pointing directly downwards and bearing the legend 'A long way South'. Fair enough.

Congressman Petri praise for referendum

VISITING United States Congressman Thomas E Petri yesterday expressed his approval of the decision of Islanders to hold a referendum on the political future of the Falklands.

He told Islanders' media that when the Falklands issue was raised internationally it was often asked 'what do the people think'. As such he believes, "they would be encouraged that there is an internationally supervised or at least an accurate testing of the opinion of the people."

He added, "so I think this (the referendum) is an effort to tap into that sentiment and make it very clear that this is something that involves a lot of human beings rather than just a piece of territory, and human beings that have invested their life sometimes for seven or eight generations now, developing a style of life and businesses and family that need to be taken into account."

Congressman Petri, who visited at the invitation of the Falkland Islands Government, explained that in the US there was no real difference of opinion on the Falklands issue between political parties. He said the US relationship, "with our hemispheric partners is very important."

He noted that Argentina was an important country in Latin America, "and like you we would like to have good relations with the Argentines."

He added, however: "They are currently having a lot of problems: their credit is bad, they are having their assets, if they should fall into other countries jurisdictions, impounded against their debts, so we hope they can figure out how to clean up their act and become a more responsible financial member of the world community."

He also criticised difficulties caused to US cruise companies in the South Atlantic caused by Argentine government interference

Falklands Government to meet Argentine Foreign Minister for 'frank exchange of views'

L-R: UK Foreign Secretary William Hague, M.L.A.s Jan Cheek and Dick Sawle and the Argentine Foreign Minister Hector Timerman scheduled to meet in London

TWO members of the Falkland Islands Legislative Assembly have stated their intention to meet with the Argentine Foreign Minister in London next week. It has been made clear by the Falkland Islands Government, however, that they will not be negotiating any deal, but anticipate, "a full and frank exchange of views."

According to a press release from the Legislative Assembly the Falkland Islands Government was advised that the Argentine Foreign Minister Hector Timerman would visit London next week, and had requested a meeting with the UK Foreign Secretary William Hague.

In turn Mr Hague told the Government of Argentina he would be happy to meet Mr Timerman and at that meeting he would want to raise the UK Government's serious concerns about Argentina's policy towards the Falkland Islands.

However, he has also made it clear that, for any conversation on Falkland Islands issues, the Falkland Islands Government must be represented.

Mr Hague also reiterated to Argentina that, "there could never be any negotiations over the sovereignty of the Falkland Islands unless and until the Falkland Islanders so wish."

The Falkland Islands Legislative Assembly has stated that it believes, "that the result of the forthcoming referendum will demonstrate definitively that we do not."

The Legislative Assembly stated yesterday: "We want to reassure anyone concerned by this that we are not going to be negotiating any deal with Argentina. Rather we are anticipating a full and frank exchange of views. Indeed we look forward to giving Mr Timerman some very direct messages on the unacceptability of Argentina's actions against the Falkland Islands in recent years."

"We demand that our rights be respected, and that we be left in peace to choose our own future and to develop our country for our children and generations to come. It is only right that he should hear this directly from us, as well as from Mr Hague."

Members of the Legislative Assembly made it clear in their letter of 2012 to President Fernandez de Kirchner (details of which were made public on June 15, 2012), that the Falkland Islands Government was willing to meet with the Government of Argentina in order to make its views clear, and to discuss matters of mutual interest including fisheries and communication. Therefore, M.L.A. Dick Sawle and M.L.A. Jan Cheek will travel to London this weekend to be available to take part in this discussion.

The Head of the Congressional Foreign Relations Committee Senator Daniel Filmus and Head of the Malvinas Observatory Deputy Guillermo Carmona are also scheduled to visit London with the Argentine Foreign Minister from the February 6 to February 7.

It is understood the delegation plans to give a presentation of Argentina's 'historical rights' to sovereignty over the Falklands, and to explain why self-determination should not apply to Falkland Islanders, along with giving press interviews.

The Argentine Foreign Minister has made many pronouncements on the Falkland in the past largely centering on the claim that Britain is 'militarising' the South Atlantic. He gave a presentation on the claim in early 2012 at the United Nations, however received little response from the UN.

At that time, the press offices of UN Secretary General Ban-Ki moon and the General Assembly President Nassir Abdulaziz Al-Nasser sent out official releases following their meetings with Timerman, but none of them made reference to the Minister's accusation of an, "increase of UK naval power in the South Atlantic."

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

THE only way the referendum next month will even come close to resulting in a "clear, democratic and incontestable," demonstration of "how the people of the Falkland Islands wish to live their lives" is if virtually every one of those people entitled to vote, make the effort to do so.

I know this is a little early (and we'll be reminding you again before the event) but as someone pointed out to me recently, with a population of 2,841 at the last census, but only 1,619 of those on the electoral role and able to vote (57 per cent) a low turn-out of the entitled few will render the result laughable to the outside world.

We already, and most unfairly, suffer the accusation that such a small population should not be entitled to self determination (I've often pondered what size of population those accusers would suggest is worthy of such a basic right) thus it is all the more important that the turn-out numbers reflect our absolute determination to take advantage of the rights already made available to us.

As an interesting aside, MLA Cheek commented in her column last week that, "a good turnout with a decisive vote can discredit their (Argentina's) nonsensical claims in the eyes of others". In relation to that comment, a person presented me with the following question: "Should members of the government be campaigning one way or the other - surely the point of a referendum is that the people decide how they want to vote?"

It was a good question I thought, but following a little investigation by a colleague it seemed MLAs were entitled to campaign 'individually' for a yes or no, however, the 'government' must remain impartial. Confusing right?

Whatever the ins and outs I think we can pretty much predict the result, and probably the most important thing to bear in mind right now is the X Factor.

Remember those times the favourite lost because the outcome seemed so obvious many people didn't bother to vote.

VOTE

(Just to be clear, I loathe the X Factor)

WHAT with the up and coming referendum, and the arrival of Stephen Nicol and Stuart Younger from Regeneris, picking our brains in order to quantify the social and economic effects of oil and gas on the Islands, it made me wonder whether at any point in the past we have ever been offered such an incredible opportunity to influence our own social and political future. And if we haven't, are we adequately taking advantage of it now?

Despite the inspiring enthusiasm of those that did attend Saturday's meeting with Regeneris, it seemed a very tiny group to be suggesting the future appearance of Stanley, the shape of immigration policy and precisely what we think comprises our 'way of life'.

Is this 'J' for Jaffray?

CELIA Short, Licensing Clerk for the Royal Falkland Islands Police, proudly presents Dereck Jaffray (of Falklands Garage) with the first registration number to be issued with the last letter being J. This signifies that 999 vehicles, using the H plate, have been registered in the Islands since November 20, 2009.

Darwin is viable say B&S

AIM-listed company Borders and Southern, who are among the small group of companies currently exploring for hydrocarbons in the Falkland Islands Southern Licensing Zone, announced this week that their Darwin well, drilled last April, appeared to be commercially viable.

At the time of the April discovery, which found quantities of gas condensate rather than crude oil, the company was somewhat restrained in its predictions, but they now claim that subsequent studies of the drilling data show that development of the discovery of the condensate, a liquid form of gas that trades at a premium to natural gas, is both technically and commercially feasible.

After this announcement on Monday, the company's shares rose by 12.5 per cent to 27.37 pence in early trading, but have since levelled off, being 25.40 pence around mid-day in London on January 31.

Borders and Southern estimates the size of its discovery at 190 million barrels. The company said it was seeking a partner prior to the next drilling period and has opened a data room for interested parties.

"We believe that the study confirms our view that Darwin is a commercial standalone development, viable with existing technology. In our view, Darwin will attract significant industry interest," Numis analyst Sanjeev Bahl said.

Analysts agree that for an oil or gas development in the South Atlantic islands to make economic sense, large quantities need to be discovered.

Borders and Southern said that its next step is to prove the extent of recoverable volumes with appraisal drilling and to confirm the predicted flow rates with a well test.

A $1.6 billion-plus project for a company with a market capitalisation of about 130 million pounds ($205.5 million) is likely to need to be developed alongside a partner.

The appraisal drilling is seen as relatively low-risk, Borders said, and it is already looking to hire a drilling rig.

Gas condensate is a valuable raw material for the production of motor fuels, as well as for chemical processes, however analysts state that this semi-refined pale-coloured liquid can be more challenging to extract commercially.

This would appear to be particularly the case when gas condensate has to be transported from the well in tankers, rather than along pipelines. In the latter case it can be transported under its own pressure to petroleum refineries for removal of low-boiling fractions and final processing.

Regeneris consult Islanders on impact of oil and gas

STEPHEN Nicol and Stuart Younger of economic development consultants Regeneris held a public meeting at the Narrows Bar on Saturday evening, launching a week of open forum meetings on the subject of the future impact of the oil and gas sector on the Falkland Islands.

At that particular gathering around 21 attendees offered their thoughts and concerns to the pair, who also gave presentations at Fox Bay, Goose Green and Hope Cottage this week.

Speaking of onshore employees required by the industry, a number of scenarios were offered. The first scenario relating to the Sealion Development only, it was said might involve a peak of 200-250 jobs with around 75 to 125 in the longer term. Under a scenario of two more oil discoveries and continued exploration, it was suggested that there might be a peak of 500 new jobs with 300 to 350 in the longer term. This they said might have a significant impact on the Falklands in a number of areas. Should further gas discoveries occur there might be a peak of more than 500 jobs which would also have a significant impact on housing, health and education.

It was suggested that potential benefits might include further job opportunities, better pay, improved air and sea links, business opportunities, improved facilities and extra revenue for the Falkland Islands Government.

On the downside problems could occur in terms of an increase in the cost of living and accommodation costs. There might also be an impact on tourism, and increased demand for workers related to oil and pressure on the construction sector.

The pair also outlined the potential impact on immigration, Stanley, employment, services and the Falkland Islands 'way of life'.

Following the presentation, members of the public were invited to write down their thoughts relating to such issues.

Under 'Immigration', thoughts centred around removing or lessening, "the uncertainty of job continuation," and looking at the, "longer term," so that the policy would encourage families to stay and, "integrate with the community."

Under 'Housing' it was clear that attendees wished for a carefully planned approach to developments in Stanley. It was suggested that houses should be either single or double story and no higher, while another person suggested a camp should be built for temporary workers. Two other persons felt a new town should be developed on West Falklands.

Under the heading 'The way you work' concerns were expressed about possible inflation. It was also suggested that emphasis should be placed on encouraging young people into studies that would bring them the opportunity to work within the oil industry.

Regeneris plan to report their findings to the Falkland Islands Government in March 2013 and present the study in April 2013.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

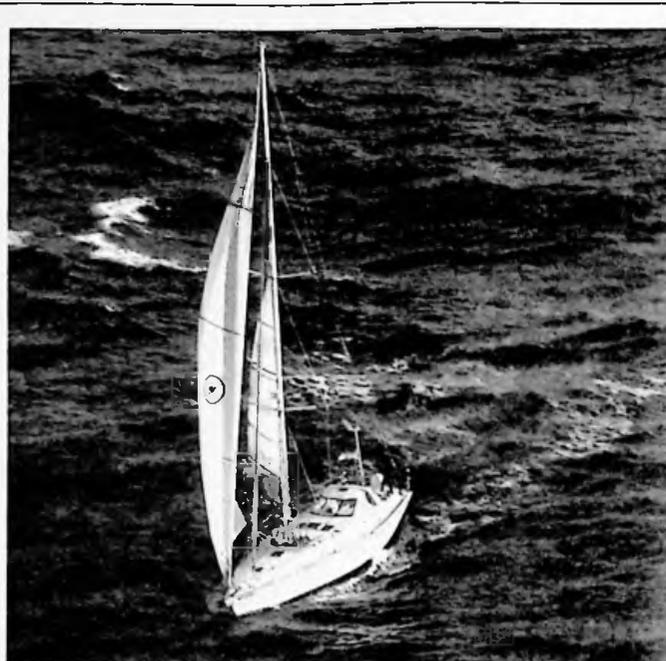

It is good to be able to welcome another Congressman and a number of others to see the Falklands first hand. We hope to be able to welcome more politicians and officials from the US in future.

Although I share your recent correspondent's concern regarding the delay in recruiting a new Director of Education, I have complete confidence in the ability and professionalism of those who will be stepping up to cover a gap. The Education Board has no role in recruitment and is purely advisory on other Education matters, so I would not expect the Board to be consulted on appointments.

Last week I met with the Remuneration Review Group which is working hard to formulate some recommendations in time for consideration for implementation in time for the new Assembly in November. There is much to consider if there is to be the opportunity for a broad range of people to offer themselves as candidates.

This week we meet with the representative from Regeneris, the consultants who will produce the more general Socio-Economic Study, as opposed to the development specific one produced for the Sea Lion development. As many know, my scepticism about consultants is deeply fixed because in general it appears that they simply gather the customers' information and ideas and give them back printed in a glossy format along with a six or seven figure invoice. However, I'm willing to give the benefit of the doubt this year because we must consider all possible angles on the challenges ahead.

The recent Times article by Matthew Parris on the near total destruction of Argentina's indigenous population really did not come as a surprise. He has also visited the Islands and has only written one negative article of which I am aware. He interviewed me once and was entirely fair and accurate in the subsequent article. I spoke to him again briefly at one of the party conferences last year where he was carefully reading some of the factual information about the Islands. His writing, sometimes painfully honest, sometimes subtle and thought provoking, is always a pleasure to read.

ON Monday night Lieutenant Commander Abhilash Tomy of the Indian Navy passed by the Falkland Islands on his single handed circumnavigation of the Globe on Indian Sailing Vessel (INSV) Mhadei.

Captain Andy Vaughan RE of Media Ops at Mount Pleasant Complex told Penguin News they believed, "he got within 65 miles of Stanley before winds pushed him further out and he sailed on."

A C130 Hercules which was flying overhead when he was a little further south obtained the image above.

INSV Mhadei is being single handedly sailed around the world south of all the great capes; Cape Leeuwing, Cape Horn and Cape of Good Hope, covering a total distance of 21,600 nautical miles, crossing the equator twice and starting and finishing its circumnavigation from the same port.

Body cameras and pepper spray for RFIP

THE Royal Falkland Islands Police has been approved funding for body worn Optical Evidence Gathering cameras, and approval for the use of PAVA incapacitating spray for all operational officers.

The Director of Emergency Services and Chief Police Officer Barry Marsden when requesting funding noted that most Saturday evenings minor disturbances occurred in the area of John Street, Philomet Street and Crozier Place and over the 2012 Christmas period there were five minor assaults upon police officers.

He believed that the use of Optical Evidence Gathering Cameras would provide crucial evidence through the clear and accurate digital video that they record and offer an extra layer of protection for officers.

Trialling in the UK of the cameras has shown a drop in assaults upon law enforcement officers.

PAVA spray is a water based synthetic pepper spray. Once sprayed at a suspect it causes their eyes to water and close and exposed skin will have a burning sensation. After care is for it to be washed off the exposed skin and to keep opening the eyes.

Training in its use would be included within each officer's annual 'use of force' training.

Grazing fees

FEES for grazing horses on Stanley Common have been reduced to £36 per horse. This represents a summer grazing fee of £24 per horse and winter grazing fee of £12 per horse.

Prior to approval of the reduction, horse owners were charged £117 per year.

The issue of grazing fees was discussed at the October 2012 Lands Committee meeting. Horse owners had made representations to Assembly Members seeking a review of fees amongst other matters. They considered that they were the only users of the common who were charged fees for its use and that the fees were relatively high.

SG shipping

SOUTH Georgia welcomed seven cruise vessels during December; most of them in the latter half of the month. Cruise ship Bremen visited twice and two private yachts and super-yacht Arctic P. with six passengers and 25 crew, also visited.

Two military vessels called in: RFA Gold Rover stopped by briefly and dropped off one visitor who returned via another vessel, and HMS Edinburgh visited between December 16 and 18. RRS James Cook was carrying out scientific research for much of December.

Star scheme and commissions proposed by Tourist Board

ACCOMMODATION standards and commissions are issues which have occupied the minds of participants in the Falkland Island tourism industry over many years and are now to be tackled head-on by the Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB).

FITB Managing Director Tony Mason today announced the launch of the Accommodation Accreditation scheme which will be launched with a first round of visits to FITB's accommodation partners, beginning on Tuesday of this week. Kevin Millington of Acorn Tourism will be providing the grading system and informing accommodation providers of the schemes requirements and levels of participation. Mr Millington is in the Falkland Islands for the next two weeks and will be working closely with providers and FITB to develop the programme.

Mr Mason states that the Accommodation Accreditation Scheme, which will rate accommodation on a scale of one to five stars, will assist local providers when marketing to European and North American tourists and there will be what he describes as, "a system in place to reward accommodation providers who make efforts to reach the next star level."

FITB is making the investment in the local infrastructure with no costs associated or passed on to accommodation providers. Mr Mason says: "I believe we must make this investment to ensure we are moving in the right direction and supporting local businesses in every way possible to improve their offering and increase tourism to the regions. This is very important as when North American and European tourists are looking for their next holiday they want to ensure they get exactly what they expect."

Mr Mason states that fees for the programme will be waived and those participating will receive a free listing on the FITB website for one year. They will be marketed through FITB's wholesalers, and be able to apply for tourism improvement programmes, which will be announced shortly.

Participants in the programme would in the future be marketed through wholesale channels, but those not participating in the scheme would not. Participants would also be expected to offer commissions.

Mr Mason says "It is important to realise our wholesalers in North America and Europe would not consider marketing our destination without a minimum of 20 per cent commission.

"This is the normal commission level anywhere else in the world, when working through agents and wholesalers.

"We must accept that commissions must be paid to travel agents and wholesalers and if needed build the additional costs into our product pricing. The way forward at this point is to begin the programme with the partners, who have agreed. Hopefully those who have opted not to participate, will soon see the benefits and we will welcome them into the programme when they are ready."

Mr Mason gives the assurance that those who do not participate will still be represented by the tourist office as they are today, but not through wholesale channels and travel agent networks.

"We are taking the Falkland Islands to the world and we need to be ready with our internal functions to ensure agents and wholesalers are willing to take on the destination and I am thankful to those who have already agreed to the programme," he said.

FITB going out into the world

FITB Managing Director, Tony Mason and his team returned last Saturday from the Adventure and Travel show in Los Angeles

While setting up for the show, the team quickly noticed the booth shipped to the show was incorrect, as it carried banners from another company

Mr Mason said he was extremely disappointed by this but quick thinking by his team saved the day enabling the Tourist Board, "to shine once more."

The next event the Tourist Board will attend is SeaTrade in Miami, where Mr Mason reports that meetings have already been secured with the major cruise lines and expedition cruise companies, with the principal aim of developing strong relationships with senior management of all of the relevant cruise lines, at board level.

Mr Mason said: "In 2013/14 we will continue to move forward presenting the Falkland Islands as a must see destination to the world. We have already obtained licensing from the Chinese Government, as an approved tourism destination which is very exciting as we reach out to emerging markets later this year. The Tourist Board will be attending shows in both China and the Middle East in the coming months."

Change the Islands image

I SUSPECT that there will be some virulent response to Paul Richards's letter in last week's PN and it is with some trepidation that I have to say that I think his opening paragraph is true, and that here in UK, people's sympathy and patience is wearing thin.

My own direct involvement with the Islands was for a mere 10 years, the most exhilarating and fulfilling time of my whole life, and every part of my body gives fervent support to your continued wish to be disassociated from any form of Argentine sovereignty. That said, the overview in UK, albeit very low profile today, should not be pooh-pooed.

Whilst I do not agree with Mr Richards' financial analysis of the burden on the British taxpayer (which certainly does exist to some extent), I feel that the costs are overstated. It has been pointed out many times that much of the defence infrastructure would exist even if Mount Pleasant did not, and that the troops, aircraft and equipment would be deployed elsewhere. The value as a training ground should never be understated. Unhappily, that fact is not promulgated in UK, (possibly a failure of your PR agents).

As an avid reader of PN, I am sometimes amazed at the number and cost of delegations and official visits to UK and elsewhere undertaken by Islanders. Setting that veiled criticism aside, part of their mission must be to try to assess how others see the Falklands. Apart from their formal tasks they are bound to meet up with many friends, family and associates, but the reaction they receive is naturally bound to be slanted. The reality is that most people (well those whose intelligence extends beyond their latest time wasting I-gadget) now think of the Islands as being the next Bahrain. That may be the fault of your PR associates who only seem able to tell us about the forthcoming oil bonanza.

At the risk of becoming the next (hang him up by the gonads) hate objective, I have to say that I support Mr Richards' use of the 'I' word in his final paragraph. 'Independence has always seemed to me to be the only possible starting point for meaningful debate. After the conflict, that was not practical in economic terms, but even then it seemed to me that it would most probably be the way it would turn out. In those days, when I pontificated at the end of boozy evenings in places like North Arm and Goose Green clubs, I ended up with a thick lip. Since then, fortune has favoured the Islands, and given the putative benefit of all revenue from oil, surely it must be a starting point?

But what do I know?

Horse cart and carrier pigeons

WHAT'S wrong with carrier pigeons and the horse and cart? They'd both add a bit of character to the streets and skies of the Falkland Islands. However, I have to admit that I would not make a good Governor of the Falkland Islands. My patience would be tested to breaking point with having to be 'diplomatic' all the time. I'd also declare that on at least one day each week we'd have a mobile phone and facebook - free day. The dinosaurs ruled the earth for many millions of years - I suspect human beings will be here for a much shorter period of time.

We contribute to defence

WITH reference to the letter from Mr P Richards 'Drain on Brit Taxpayers' I would like to make a few comments.

We are very grateful for the defence provided to our Islands and do not take it for granted. We do contribute to the costs of defence here by spending approximately 2 per cent of our annual budget either as direct support in the form of houses, a swimming pool, a cinema or other similar works for the military. A very major part of our contribution is in the provision of the Falkland Islands Defence Force (FIDF). Our defence force is well trained and well equipped and forms an integral part of the defence of our Islands. In monetary terms the total spend is around £1m per annum which is, I believe, reasonable given the size of our population.

The costs to the UK taxpayer in defence of the Falklands is less than 0.5 per cent of the UK defence budget. The Falkland Islands are a superb training ground for the UK forces, and if they were not training here, then I am sure they would be deployed at similar expense elsewhere.

If it were not for Argentina's aggression, we would of course have no requirement for defence.

To answer your point about people who live here viewing themselves as Falkland Islanders first and British second, this is surely no surprise. I have met many British people who are proud to be Glaswegians, or Liverpudlians, or Mancunians or of course Scottish, Irish or Welsh. This simply represents an affinity with where you feel you have the most ties.

We have been and always will be grateful for the sacrifices that ensured our freedom and fundamental human rights, including that of self-determination. This latter point is one supported by all of the UK politicians of all parties. Many in our community spend a great deal of time, expense and energy on a regular basis working with returning veterans to help them come to terms with what was a terrible time for many of them. We will always do this, and there are many close friendships that have built up here as a result. One such example is the letter on the same page as your last week from a very good friend - Gordon Mather.

Weak reason

IN response to the 'Drain on Brit tax payers' letter I think Mr Richards has chosen a weak reason for having a go at Falkland Islanders.

I am no expert but a cursory search of information on the annual UK defence budget shows amounts quoted ranging from £32.9bn to £46.3bn. Taking even the lower amount, then, the £61m he quotes for the annual cost of providing defence to the Falkland Islands equates to just 0.08 per cent of the UK defence budget.

Contrast this, then, with the costs of maintaining a British military presence in Cyprus, say. A parliamentary answer in June from the MoD's Andrew Robathan makes interesting reading: "The total amount spent on service family accommodation in Cyprus since May 2010 to date is some £67m." £33m a year for some family housing versus £61m for a fully operational combined services base. Suddenly, the total cost of MPA looks rather favourable, and at least the Islanders, unlike the Cypriots, are British and strongly loyal to Britain.

On top of this we can look at the benefits the presence in the Falkland Islands brings. I recall a captain in one of the Resident Infantry Companies commenting how useful it was for his men to have a stint in the Falkland Islands before returning to their base in Cyprus after a tour of Iraq. RAF officers also told me how the flight crews of the Tornados found it refreshing to be able to do some low level flying without having to worry about complaints from civilians (such that they get back in the UK). However, even this, I think, misses one vital point and that is that when the mother country needed the Falkland Islands the Islanders were there, from providing an important, strategic re-supply point in both World Wars, through to the men who volunteered for the British armed forces (including, I believe a fighter pilot in the Battle of Britain) to the purchasing of Spitfire fighters in WW2 (ten, I recall reading somewhere). So, with the Falkland Islands having contributed to the defence of Britain it seems only fair to me that Britain defends the Falkland Islands in its time of need. Lastly, as a non-Islander I can say that I do not think there is anywhere that appreciates the sacrifices past and present that the armed forces have provided and continue to provide as much as the Falkland Islands, even a garrison town such as Mr Richards' Colchester.

Disappointed

I WAS disappointed to read Paul Richards's grumpy letter in Penguin News 33. I have not noticed that peoples' sympathy and patience towards the Falklands is starting to wear thin because of the cost of defence, as he writes. British forces have been affected by the cut-backs in expenditure in the UK, but there will always be sufficient forces to be able to intervene in the world in defence of justice and right. Our forces have bases in a number of places throughout the world, where they are able to train effectively for any threat from warmongers and fanatics. The defence budget is a vital part of our economy.

Roads money not strictly true

I NOTED while listening to the recent public meeting and in particular to the discussion with regard to the idea to designate all remaining roads, it was mentioned by one MLA that FIG had spent a lot of money in making these roads.

This is not strictly true.

Many roads built after the Port Louis road were in fact built using farmers/business STABEX money from the European Community.

This money was originally thought to be paid to the farming sector at a time when their farm wool prices fell to a point below the level agreed by the European sector.

Our leaders at the time felt that it would be better rather than this to use the money to build roads and improve systems for landing craft operations to farms on islands.

In effect the roads are paid for by the farming community. Now Government is attempting to deprive those very farmers, who should have got the money, the right to use the road for the benefit of easier access across their land. Or in other words forcing them to pay money for something that already belongs to them.

Yes I agree for the need to for all of those people who drive for a business to be fully licenced and insured, but does it necessarily mean that the current un-designated roads will be safer through designation? Probably not.

There is a much simpler answer to the whole issue of the rural sector and that is to leave the roads as they are, un-designated, and simply put up clear signs informing anyone wishing to drive along these roads do so at their own risk. Let's face it, the real reason those roads are going to be designated is simply to force everyone to pay the government more money. What ever happened to common sense?

This is yet another stunt to change part of our identity. I know that there is mixed feelings amongst the town and West Falklands road users but like I said, simply make those wishing to do business that takes them into town, get a licence and pay full road tax and insurance, then everyone would be happy.

Camp driving on or off roads is still one of the most popular means of learning to drive. Not everyone can afford the expense of a tutor and on top of that I know of many people who have driven for most of their lives, without ever getting a licence, who are probably much better drivers than some of the hair-brained know-it-alls flying around town these days.

There is a far more likely chance of an innocent person being injured or killed in Stanley's ever increasing traffic than those driving in the open wilderness along what most term as basic all weather tracks.

To designate these roads I am sure will open up a whole can of expensive worms against the FIG. Can they afford that?

MPA was major project

WITH regard to the letter from Mr Freeman Penguin News January 18, 2013:

I started on the MPA contract in November 1983 in the UK and arrived at East Cove January 1984 on the MV England. If I remember correctly it was Sunday January 22. It was a glorious day, the sun was shining, we then disembarked and were allocated to our Porta-cabin which housed eight persons with a short sprint to the ablution block this being the temporary shore camp at East Cove.

We were the second ship to arrive to commence the work on the contract, our team was from Wyseplan a sub contractor to LMA and our job was to construct the accommodation and ancillary buildings as required to house and feed a large workforce (Facility 38).

In all our team was 100 personnel which was a complete team of all trades.

I would like to take this opportunity to say thank you to all the lads who worked with me; they never complained or moaned at any task they were asked to do, or complained about the weather, just got out and on with the job. Not only did we work at MPA but also built the hostel at the same time and helped out on the renovations for the temporary hospital in Stanley after the hospital fire. Some of the lads had worked with me previously in Algeria and other contracts overseas; on completion of our work the lads went home and some returned to work with LMA. I moved to Stanley as site agent with Fairclough Miller on the new hospital contract until the completion. I met and made friends with a lot of Stanley residents (Bert Ford, Neil and Mike McKay and Graham Mor-rierson) and those lads worked and assisted in all manner of ways on the MPA contract. Mike Butcher Graham Minto, Ally Biggs, Hector Villalon, and so many more helped on the hospital contract. When we started work in the Falklands we were advised we could not employ locals unless they were employed by a local agent; this was explained to us so that the businesses would not lose their employees and also to keep the wages stable.

No one expected a medal for doing their job; conditions at times could be rough, but what do you expect? Anyone who watched the TV in Britain during the conflict, must have at some time seen the miserable weather the military were having to put up with. They deserved their medals; they did not have comfortable accommodation to turn into after work or mess halls to have their meals in, plus a choice of various meals to choose from. No, they had K rations if they were lucky. I do believe that there were some personnel who were with LMA that received some recognition however I agree, the airfield contract did not receive the recognition it deserved.

A project of that size and complexity included everything from the ongoing logistics of obtaining materials in sequence from factories to transport and dock storage facilities, then onward shipping of the correct materials and plant as the contract progressed, all to meet site progress.

Perhaps I have gone on too long but needed to have my say

Regards to all from 'Wyseplan Bob' as I was known at MPA

Thank you to all

I WOULD like to pass on a thank you to all of the people that made me so welcome and made it a memorable visit.

Firstly to Carli and Angus for welcoming me into their home for two weeks. Then for my time with 21 men, women and children who took me into their group for the New Year stay at Northwest Arm, like Neville and Pauline, Chris and Natalie, Shaun and everyone else, children included. Also thanks to Carlos and his family at the Narrows Bar and to Ellen and Gary at Liberty Lodge, Karen and Paul Ford for helping me complete my wish to visit West Falkland to meet Rosemary, Alex, Dot and kids and spend the night with them at Dunnose Head. Also thanks to Taff and Carrie for the welcome at Fox Bay; those at Little Chartres and for being able to watch the lamb marking with Trap and Josie, plus the invite to their house in Chartres. Thanks to Murphy and his wife and Critta at Port Howard for the accommodation there.

I also have to mention my visit to Bull Cove (not sure if that's correct) and being made so welcome by everyone else I met on the West.

Also thanks to the many people in Stanley who were so nice and chatted to me, as this trip was also about meeting people as well as seeing the battlefields, memorials and wildlife as on my previous visits. Finally the invite to meet the Governor at Government House and for a candid chat about just about everything involving the Islands. Thank you Nigel.

If I have missed out anyone by name I am truly sorry as I met so many very nice people.

Ill-informed letter

I WRITE in response to Mr Richards letter in this week's Penguin News.

Firstly, congratulations on publishing what we consider to be an ill-informed (aside from pound-sign mentality) letter. It is worth noting that as a UK tax payer and someone who has recently been made redundant, I fully understand the gravity of the financial situation in which the United Kingdom finds itself.

I am unsure where this gentleman gets the information that 'little attention' is paid to the dispute with Mrs K and her cronies and that people in the UK have a 'patience that is wearing thin?'

I am assuming that Mr Richards has not visited the Falkland Islands. David and I have been very fortunate in having visited four times, and I think Mr Richards has missed the point of being a British person in this day and age.

A sense of fair play, freedom of speech, democratic government; no matter what the population size, a voice on the world stage and protection from aggression and suppression are all part and parcel of today's British Commonwealth; as is investment in individual territories' futures and security of the population to do as it wishes, including the option of independence when it is right and viable at the democratic choice of its inhabitants. All of the above would not be afforded under Argentine rule.

Whether Mr Richards likes it or not, the Empire existed. Its remnants remain, but independent minds and far away populations should not have to uproot merely to please one narrow-minded man in Essex.

I think you would do well Mr Richards' to visit the Islands, speak with the Islanders, understand their way of life and the importance of being British. Remove your blinkered financial eyes and think about people first.

Acutely aware of defence costs

I WOULD like to try to reply to Mr Paul Richards's letter in your last issue on a number of points - but first of all he should be aware that every Falkland Islander is acutely aware of the amount that our defence is costing the British taxpayer.

We only wish it were different and one day in the not too distant future it may be. At the moment we just do not have the resources to pay but if the oil bonanza happens he may be assured that there is nothing better I would like than to be able to look him in the eyes and say: "We are not costing you a penny," because number one on my wish list is for us to be able to pay for our own defence. He should also be aware that The Falklands Islands Defence Force is regarded as a potent ally by British Forces here in the Falklands and is very capable of doing its bit in the event of any Argentine aggression. Of course FIDF is paid for by us and the Falkland Islands Government also makes a considerable contribution to facilities at Mount Pleasant.

Mr Richards also says: "And, to add insult to injury from all of the above, and despite the sacrifices of UK soldiers in the 1982 conflict, in the recent census fewer than one thirds of the Falkland Islanders identified as British - 29 per cent. 71 per cent stated their national identity as 'Falkland Islander'."

This I resent and I am very surprised at the way he misinterprets this result. I would suggest that in the UK, if people were asked the same question, a very large proportion of the people would answer 'Scottish', 'Welsh' or 'English' first and 'British' second.

This is exactly the situation here. No one is more 'British' than a Falkland Islander who is loyal to Her Majesty as well, and this is one fact that infuriates the Argentines too. Falkland Islanders have fought and died for Britain in two World Wars in the past to preserve the freedom we all have today and Falkland Islanders will NEVER forget the way Britain Forces came to our rescue in 1982.

SAAS 'better positioned than ever'

PN: How is SAAS positioned to meet Customer requirements in 2013 and onwards?

SAAS: We're better positioned than ever to meet customer requirements. We have a solid service, excellent equipment, and an experienced workforce

PN: The company appears to have struggled up till now to survive, would you say this is correct?

SAAS: Indeed, it has had a difficult few years, which have not been easy to overcome. However now we are in a position from which we can succeed and play a vital role in the economy of the Islands. It should be noted that we still have to compete with very well positioned opposition, where there is a perceived unfair advantage regarding the supply of bunkers to the fishing vessels. This is not what we say, but what is reported to us by the fishing companies.

PN: So what has changed to put you in a better position?

SAAS: Well, we now have the required asset base from which to operate, we have the shareholder support, and we have a product that has matured and grown which is appreciated by a sizeable segment of the market here in the Falklands.

PN: You seem to qualify what you say relative to the market support?

SAAS: Actually, we believe that the service and product is well received across the full spectrum of the market here in the Falklands, however, because of the complexity of the structure of a major sector of the export market, the decision on how to ship their export product is not always made here in the Islands. That is one of the main problems that we have encountered and it is one that continues to impact our ability to grow, even to maintain the service.

PN: Are you pin pointing one particular sector of the export market when you highlight this problem you face?

SAAS: Yes indeed, it is of course the fishing industry. The majority of decisions on how to ship cargo are not made here in Stanley, but abroad, primarily in Spain.

This issue should have been addressed many years ago when SAAS was set up. Some of the added value concepts associated with the fishing industry are not enjoyed here at the levels they should be, such as containerisation, cargo handling, and storage and freight revenues. The vast majority of these added value revenues go abroad. The Falkland Islands sees only a tiny portion of what could be earned here.

PN: But surely the fishing industry has been well served by others for many years in providing sea transport?

SOUTH American Atlantic Marine Services, General Manager Eugene Hurley, spoke to Penguin News this week about the company and how it has matured and grown despite what the company views as a lack of support from some sectors within the Falkland Islands and problems inflicted upon it by the Argentine government.

SAAS: Indeed it has, and hopefully that will continue. The positioning of SAAS in the market place is to support all sectors of the industry and to generate business up to the maximum capacity of the vessel, we target optimal use of the assets at our disposal, and this would represent a relatively small percentage of the entire market.

We would look to have a more even playing field in future, as now this relationship between the supply of bunker and transport of fish catch by Lavinia is damaging to SAAS.

PN: Are there other factors affecting SAAS?

SAAS: On the political front, while SAAS has received excellent financial support from its shareholders, it has had to bear the brunt of Argentine interference in the business on its own.

By this I mean that once the Argentine Government, through which ever way it chose, managed in the past to stop the SAAS service, then the onus has been on us to deal with this.

More thought could have gone into this, and better planning coupled with a proactive approach by the right people could well have resulted in a more stable container service in the past. It is pointless reacting after the actions have been made by Argentina and expecting SAAS to find alternatives. Stoppage of the SAAS service is a direct economic embargo, and protection and support to SAAS should be at the same levels as that given to the tourist industry or any industry suffering as a result of Argentine intervention.

PN: Is SAAS involved in the entire market?

SAAS: The company has little or no involvement in the Loligo market due in part to the decision process for choosing sea transportation not being controlled in The Falklands.

We also have no involvement in the Illex market at all. Despite offering rates that we believe were very competitive in 2012, we did not ship one single Illex. It is unlikely that SAAS will ever carry Illex in the course of this year or any year in the future, despite being more than competitive on price per ton.

PN: So where does your support come from today?

SAAS: Today we receive support from the meat industry and from the wool industry. Indeed the farming sector has been a great supporter of SAAS over the years. We also receive good and loyal support from the majority of importers into the Islands, and from a number of the fishing companies who use SAAS on a regular basis and have done so for a number of years primarily in finfish and other products, and for the brave, with the occasional Loligo shipments.

Indeed SAAS would not be supplying the service it does without the loyal support of a core group of customers, however they on their own cannot support the service on an ongoing basis, it is up to those local companies, who are issued with licences by the Falkland Islands Government for fishing rights, to support SAAS in an open and price competitive market.

PN: How is your market shaping up for 2013?

SAAS: We appear to be constantly working in the ghost of the past, and the view of many here is that while they see the value of the service, either the perceived risk is too great or the decision is not theirs to make, so we are left with a potential shortfall of volumes from the fishing sector.

PN: And where would that leave SAAS?

SAAS: We would have to wait and see how the shareholders would view another shortfall.

Certainly getting into 2013 has been tough, and to have a weak first season would leave us exposed, and it would leave others exposed as well where they rely on SAAS in part or in full, particularly the farming community and the import sector.

PN: Do you see any alternatives to SAAS?

SAAS: While it is unusual to have a container service for a relatively small community, circumstances are unusual, and therefore in looking at alternatives, there is limited choice.

There is the excellent service already in place from The UK, and the frozen bulk option for fish, plus the possibility for people in the fishing industry to take their product to other ports, however, these options may involve additional cost or other operational difficulties not yet considered.

SAAS can continue where people understand the greater concept, that of the container link for the Falkland Islands, not only for fish, but for all products, supporting agriculture, construction, retail and related industries. Perhaps the capital structure or revenue structure of SAAS can be reviewed; however, no matter what way it is presented, the only choice is a container service.

Certainly, I would say that the Islands need a container link, so it is not so much that an alternative would need to be discussed, but more a means of making better use of the service that is in place, with cargo that is available.

Original windows

A house so ordinary that it is special

WHEN one thinks of buildings listed as having historical importance in a British context, the tendency is to envisage castles, country houses, ancient churches and the former homes of famous people.

In the Falkland Islands with our relatively limited period of human presence, the situation is rather different, however it still came as a bit of a surprise to find that Executive Council had approved the listing of 63 Fitzroy Road.

Until recently, the home of the late Mr and Mrs Pauloni, 63 Fitzroy Road seems to be a somewhat shabby but otherwise totally unremarkable cottage of a sort that could have been built in Stanley at any time before the 1960s or thereabouts: it has a red roof of corrugated iron, white walls of the same material and original green wooden windows and doors.

Looked at more closely the house has other features which combine to make it typical, such as wooden finials, the original half-glazed front porch, a picket fence and some wooden gutter brackets.

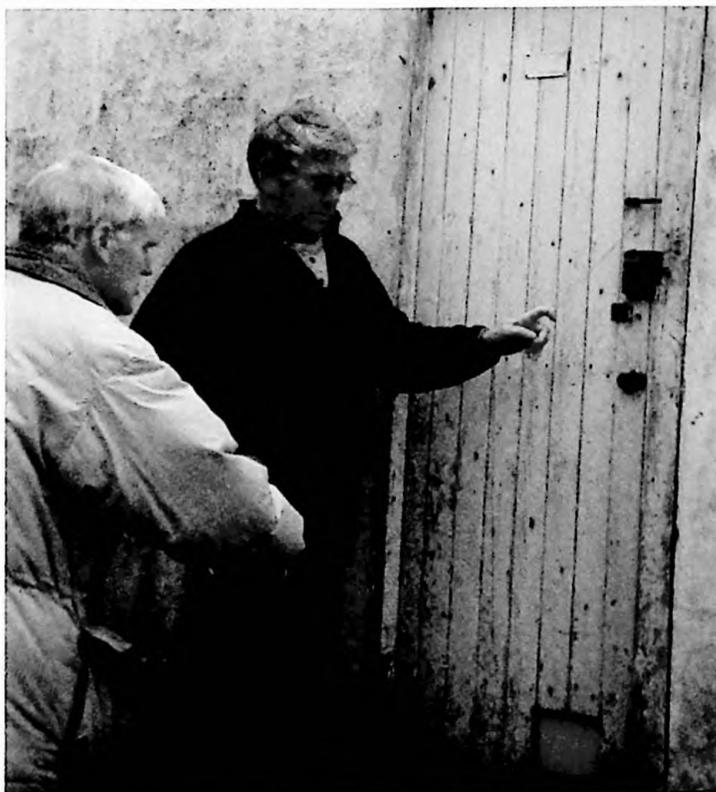

Apart from the removal of one brick chimney 63 Fitzroy Road is virtually unaltered since its construction and it is this lack of modification that makes it of interest in an age when the appearance of so many houses once typical of the Falklands building vernacular have been altered by enlargement, the fitting of double-glazing or the use of plastic cladding.

Also of interest at 63 Fitzroy Road, and part of the listing, is a shed which it is thought once contained the bakery of Mark and Alice Gleadell, one of the first of three bakeries to supply Stanley. On its door it carries a plaque dated 1941, which gives details of the 'double-decked' oven which the shed once contained.

The present owners, Mr and Mrs Vernon Steen, have already shown a keen and practical interest in preserving evidence of the Falklands architectural past in their restoration of the old house at Paragon.

The listing of their latest project will enable them to apply for some funding to restore its external appearance at least.

This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

The Wool Market Report - 24 January, 2013

by Agricultural Advisor Helen Thoday

The AWEX ended this week at AU$1,099 a reduction of 51 cents. A total of 58,189 bales were offered this week, with a clearance of 91.7%.

No particular micron ranges were losing prices with most losing about 1% off the price. Optimism still remains in the market with reports that China still needs to fill large orders in its textile production.

Wool demand and prices in UK are soaring. They have reached 195p/kg which is only one penny off the highest prices of 2012, recorded in July. Clearance rates at auction are at 100% and 55% of the UK clip has already been sold.

Beauty preserved and open to the public

THE Old Chartres Horse Paddock on West Falklands now The Patricia Luxton National Nature Reserve will soon be opened to the public to enjoy freely, Bill Luxton told Penguin News this week.

Bill explained, "The Reserve is the old Chartres Horse Paddock which until about 40 years ago used to carry about 120 horses; each shepherd having his own troop of up to 12 or so. It has never been grazed by sheep hence the survival of many rare plant species. It was designated as a National Nature Reserve in 2010, and at the moment there is a small number of pensioner horses surviving."

He said it was the wish of his late wife Pat Luxton that it should be preserved for all time in its pristine state for the enjoyment of everyone in the Islands, and both Bill and Pat's son Stephen intend, "to carry this plan through with the help of Clare Cockwell, Protected Areas Project Officer, Falklands Conservation, and the Environmental Studies Budget which has provided funds to help us develop the site for visitors."

In the near future they hope to have information signs erected at the entrances and also some suggested walking trails to take in areas of special interest. He said, "We also hope to have readily available information leaflets for next summer. This will be an area freely open to the public with no need to get any permission and we ask that all visitors will endeavour to preserve the beauty of the Reserve; in particular, no mud tracking"

The area has been enjoyed before by large groups. Bill said on News Years Eve 2000, Westers and many other visitors held a Millennium Party, "at a very beautiful location just up The Old House Stream from the road crossing and old iron bridge, and this is to be available to everyone (again without needing permission) as a picnic, recreational and camping area. In 2000 there were hundreds of people visiting and camping and a great time was had by all."

Bill said, "The site is to be called The Millennium Picnic and Camp Site, and we plan to erect some provisional signs to it before the West Sports in February, so that visitors may take advantage of it while en route to and from the Sports. It is conveniently placed about half way from the ferry terminal to Fox Bay. It is a 'wild camping' site and there are no facilities so we do earnestly request that if you brought it with you - please take it away. Cooking should be done using a gas or spirit stove; please take care not to start a fire at the campsite or elsewhere in the reserve."

Quick thinking farmers may have saved albatross colony

QUICK action by Falklands farmers may have saved severe damage to a colony of albatross, Graham Harris of the Wildlife Conservation Society told Penguin News this week.

Jeannette and Michael Clarke were sailing towards Steeple Jason in the Condor on Tuesday January 22, when Jeannette sighted a small fire on the South side of Grand Jason.

Tendrils of smoke were rising through the tussock grass into the still air a few metres up from the shore where the terrain rises steeply and immediately above is sited a large colony of black browed albatrosses.

They realised action had to be taken quickly and luckily the weather was calm so Michael decided to continue to Steeple Jason to pick up two researchers from Falklands Conservation who had been working there along with a visiting vet. Michael also picked up fire fighting equipment and they all returned to Grand Jason.

The island was deserted at the time so Michael concluded the fire must have been started by a lightning strike. The affected area was small, roughly four by fourteen metres, indicating the strike was very recent. In fact, the three on Steeple Jason, Andy Stanworth, Jonno Handley and Reinhard Mische reported seeing a storm with lightning that very morning, to the north.

The four men worked for several hours, cutting out smouldering tussock bogs and rolling them down the hill onto the shore where they could burn themselves out harmlessly. Fortunately the peat in this area was not deep and they were able to cut away all the burning vegetation they could find. Michael told Rob McGill when they returned to Carcass Island late that evening, that although a few albatross nests had been affected, he hoped they had been able to put the fire out completely.

Rob McGill, who manages Grand and Steeple Jason for the Wildlife Conservation Society, is now organising a trip back to Grand Jason as soon as weather permits, to visit the site and check that in fact the fire is out. There has been very little rain on West Falklands in recent months and with vegetation as dry as it is, the risk of fire remains extremely high. There is even concern that this may not have been the only lightning strike on the island.

Graham commented; "Thank you Michael and Jeannette for your quick action, and to the helping hands from Falklands Conservation and Reinhard. Let's hope that your good work has solved what could have been a lot of damage for Grand Jason and its extraordinary wildlife."

Heartfelt thanks from the Royal Marine yompers

Mne Ant Woodman, Mne Joel Newby, Sgt Richard Jeffrey, Mne Lee Mason, Mne Matt Lewis.

A ROYAL Marine Detachment that retraced the steps of the 1982 yompers, marching from Port San Carlos to Stanley just before Christmas write to express their gratitude to all of those they met on the way.

Sgt Jeffrey told Penguin News: "My thoughts are to simply thank all the people of East Falklands who supported us along the way even those who stopped to shout words of encouragement as we marched along the roads. But there has to be a special mention for the families that went out of their way to assist us, those being Dave and Pam at New House for the overnight accommodation and a whooping thanks to Jan and Tanya at Douglas, who despite dazzling us with an electrical display of mother nature and allowing us to sleep in the wee bungalow, also found time to cook us a great meal and feed us with ample cakes and goodies.

"Thanks to Hazel at Teal Inlet, who gave us water after calling somewhat unannounced and showing us the way to the shearing shed

And a final thank you to Ailsa and Tony at Estancia, who allowed us to stay over and lashed us up with Pussers bunkbeds - never before have they been more appealing!

"We were very appreciative of the brews and cakes and all of us hope that Ailsa recovered quickly from her turn of ill-health and it did not spoil her Christmas."

Below: Sergeant Jeffrey and Colour Sergeant Law on Two Sisters. Sergeant Jeffrey said, "after Trev had talked us through the whole battle - this also happened to be the first time Trev stopped for a breath."

Hypocrites steeped in blood

FREQUENTLY controversial newspaper columnist, Matthew Parris, who was a member of the British Parliament during 1982, has not been noted in the past as a supporter of the Falkland Islands in their struggle to avoid annexation by Argentina. It was something of a surprise, therefore, to read an article by him in the Times of January 26, entitled Argentina's hypocrites are steeped in blood.

The impetus for the article, which began, "The Falklands was just a pantomime skirmish. But the wiping out of the country's native peoples was genocide" concerns the question, "Where have all the South American Indians gone?" which according to Parris, "should haunt every traveller to Argentina."

The answer that Parris gives is that whereas in neighbouring countries such as Bolivia, Peru and Paraguay there are still large indigenous populations who play a central part in the lives of their countries, in Argentina they have been "wiped from history." He continues, "The European settlers who now populate Argentina - Italian, Spanish, German, Welsh - are the relatively recent inheritors of colonisers who quite simply exterminated the people whose land this was." This process, which continued from 1820 to 1880, reached its apogee with what became known as The Desert Campaign of 1879, long after Argentina became independent from Spain.

Parris quotes the leader of the Desert Campaign, General Julio Argentino Rosa, who later became President of Argentina and whose name and statues litter Argentina today as saying, "Our self-respect as a virile people obliges us to put down as soon as possible, by reason or by force, the handful of savages who destroy our wealth and prevent us from definitely occupying, in the name of law, progress and our own security, the richest and most fertile lands of the Republic."

Referring to the claim that a civilian Argentine population was expelled from the Falklands in 1833, Parris says, "It makes the blood boil to hear the current President of Argentina, in her recent letter to David Cameron, describe a pantomime skirmish involving a handful of people (most of whom stayed put anyway and kept their property) on some windswept islands far out into the ocean as having "forcibly stripped" her countrymen of their rightful land; and as being a blatant exercise of 19th Century colonialism. "The hypocrisy!"

Parris continues by calling Argentina the "Rhodesia of the New World" and asks, "If Britain forcibly stripped Argentina of the Falkland Islands, what does Cristina Fernandez de Kirchner think the nation she leads did on the mainland? What words would she find for the cold-blooded and systematic destruction and total dispossession of Argentina's original population by the European invaders whose descendants' votes she now seeks?"

Of course what Parris is referring to when he talks about the genocide of the indigenous peoples of Argentina or the events in Port Louis in 1833, is history, which as we in the Falklands know to our cost, may have more than one version. Parris's view is shared by many in Argentina, including a minister of Argentina's Supreme Court of Justice, Eugenio, Raúl Zaffaroni who is quoted in Gonzalo Sánchez's book, Patagonia Perdida (Lost Patagonia) as describing the descendants of Argentina's indigenous peoples as "made invisible, survivors of the genocides practised on them."

An opposite version of this episode in Argentina's history which does not figure prominently in school text books is held by many. The issue of what happened to the indigenous people in Argentina in the 19th Century has become an increasingly live one due to the many claims going through the courts for the restitution of what are claimed to be ancestral lands. Perhaps the most famous of these claims was that made for the restitution of 535 hectares of land made by a Mapuche couple, Atilio Curiñanco and Rosa Nahuelquir against the Italian Benetton family, owners in Patagonia of some one million hectares.

Another journalist, Rolando Hanglin is a recent apologist for the efforts made by successive Argentine governments in the 19th Century to eradicate the native peoples. He supports the view that the Mapuche tribe was not indigenous at all to Argentina, but came from Chile and by their ferocity had either themselves wiped out or forced integration onto the pre-existing indigenous communities. In chilling detail in a recent article in La Nación, Hanglin describes their bloodthirsty raids on white settlers of Patagonia, with the consequent throat-cutting, rape and kidnapping of settlements and the carrying off of their extensive herds of cattle.

The whole historical issue is clearly a complicated one and subject to very partisan interpretation. Equally complicated is the legal position in this combat between two cultures, one of which invokes a law based on the absolute right of ownership while the other believes that everything including the land is held in common. The reader might at this stage be justified in asking what this has to do with the Falklands and the Argentine claim and the answer, apart from Parris's accusations of hypocrisy on the part of the Argentine Government, may be 'nothing'. There is, however, an interesting parallel to be observed between a government which refuses to admit the legitimacy of Falkland Islanders as a people and those who also deny the rights of the Mapuches: an indigenous group, which whatever its place of origin and however savage its customs, has been present in Argentina since before that country even existed.

We return again to the book Patagonia Perdida by Gonzalo Sánchez and the Argentine Minister of the Nation's Supreme Court of Justice, Eugenio, Raúl Zaffaroni, who is quoted as describing the Desert Campaign as a real massacre and says, "There has never been a massacre without what in criminology is described as a neutralisation of values. I neutralise my values by demeaning my victim. I neutralise my values by claiming that my victim is the aggressor."

This concept of 'neutralisation of values' which might be also described as an ability to lie to oneself, goes a long way to explaining many of the attitudes of the present Argentine Government towards the Falkland Islanders, their government, the protective British military presence in the Islands that they make necessary and maybe even towards their many creditors.

Telemed link for KEMH

David Jenkins

THE Director of Health and Social Services, David Jenkins confirmed that there had been a recent successful trial of a high-tech telemedicine linkage with the University Hospital Southampton (UHS) NHS Trust, "that could, in the future, assist KEMH doctors and nurses by aiding their clinical decision-making and bringing to the bedside expert specialist opinion."

The proposal is seen by the UHS as a major expansion of their services via telemedicine from the city. They confirmed that clinicians in hospitals on the Falklands, Channel Islands and the Isle of Wight could have access to specialists at UHS at any time of the day or night. Additionally, that the system would allow staff to carry out training sessions and analyse complex cases.

Dr Michael Marsh, medical director at UHS and lead for telemedicine, stated: "Telemedicine is a brilliant but under-used technology and I am delighted we are further developing our links with the Falkland Islands, Channel Islands and the Isle of Wight to give our fellow professionals and patients access to staff for opinion, support and guidance."

Mr Jenkins said it was important to note: "these are only proposals at the moment."

He did confirm that in his view technologically the system would work and that such developments were very important in positioning the Falklands Health service, "to best manage current and future healthcare challenges."

He said it was early days in the considerations however, but felt obliged to raise this issue publicly as the UHS recently published news of the, "potential linkage."

Summer holiday fun and games

The Holiday Programme gang at Surf Bay

STANLEY Leisure Centre held a variety of activities and trips for the children on their Holiday Programme this year to distract them from school holiday boredom.

There was a theme for each week that brought with it different and exciting activities.

In the Animal week they took a trip down to Gypsy Cove to look at wildlife, then to Surf Bay for a sandcastle competition. When the group arrived at Surf Bay there was a King penguin having a snooze and further up the beach a baby seal too.

The group also took a trip to Goose Green where they watched some shearing, fed hens and ducks, collected eggs and played in the school park.

There was also a Christmas week, New Years week and a Space week during which the children got creative and arty at SLC; had crazy hours and aqua runs in the pool; went to MPA for the cinema, bowling and even some wall climbing.

The children really enjoyed it and would like to thank the following people for letting them come and use your facilities.

MPA Gym staff for the wall climbing, NAAFI staff for the bowling, Cinema staff for opening the Cinema for us, FIDF for the use of their hall, Nigel for the bouncy castles and Keith Alazia, Wayne McCormick and the shearers for our fun day out at Goose Green, and anyone who supplied any bits and bobs for craft work.

Argos archery awards for aggregate scores

MEMBERS of the Falklands Archery Club received their Argos Ltd medals for their aggregate Portsmouth scores from over the last two quarters on Wednesday January 23.

The Club welcomed Peter Thompson of Argos Ltd who presented the awards to the members.

Mr Thompson took his turn at the bow and after having a go at archery commented he found it quite addictive.

"We are more than happy to continue to support the Club, I thoroughly enjoyed it and you have a very friendly bunch with a real club atmosphere.

"It's great to have a sport where juniors can participate alongside adults," said Mr Thompson.

The Junior Argos Award was also presented to Tom Short for the month of December (well done Tom).

The Club would like to thank Argos Group Limited for their continued support.

Junior archery

ARCHER Michael McLeod visited the Infant and Junior School this week to launch the IJS archery club, which gives children of 9 years and up the chance to use real archery equipment in the safe environment under proper instruction from members of the adult club.

Head Teacher of IJS/CE Tom Hill said Mr McLeod gave up a huge amount of his time arranging all the equipment and setting up the IJS hall to make it safe, and with the help of Mr Willie Bowles, constructed the safety netting and target boards necessary.

Mr Hill explained they had started planning the club last winter as a joint project with the Falkland Island Archery Club who were keen to start training younger children. Currently for a child to shoot with the adult club they have to be 12 years old and accompanied by an adult.

"Children benefit from a great many extra-curricular activities at IJS, but we are always on the look out for more," said Mr Hill.

Golf news

STANLEY Golf course was the venue for two keenly contested tournaments this weekend.

On Saturday, 20 players signed in for the Argos Ltd event. A cold south westerly wind meant players needed two or even three more layers of clothing than modesty required the previous weekend. The group containing Darren Wade, Gordon Lennie and Tim Bonner were having a free scoring round amassing 110 points between them.

In the end, Tim Bonner edged in front and posted a personal best round to secure the win on 39 stableford points, with Darren in second place on 36 points and Eugene Hurley third, firing in three birdies on his way to recording 36 points. Leading a cluster of players on 35 points was Glenn Ross who collected the prize for the best back nine with 20 points; the prize for best front nine went to Richard Bonner on 18 points. Nearest the pin on the 12th went to Eugene, who was less than two feet away from an ace and the best shot of the day into the 17th was by our club Captain Troyd Bowles. Longest drive down the 18th went to Ian Stewart.

The club and members wish to thank Peter Thompson and all at Argos Ltd for their generous sponsorship of this event.

Better weather greeted the players on Sunday morning and something of a mathematical test posed by our Captain. In the modified stableford format, nett eagles and birdies secure extra points but pars receive no particular reward, there is though extra punishment for bad golf, return a bogey and it is minus 1 off your total and double bogeys, minus 3.

Estimates on the winning score were around the +4 or +5 mark, no one mentioned this to Tony McMullen who powered his way to a +16 score, including two nett eagles and a nine point winning margin.

In second place was Ieuan Ford, who put together a superb homeward nine holes of just one over par for 13 points, this was enough to recover from an indifferent start and beat Rod Tuckwood, also +7 overall, into third on a count back.

Longest drive on the 14th went to Eugene Hurley and nearest the pin on the 13th in two shots went to Bob Gilbert and Roy Smith zeroed in on the 16th flag. Our thanks to Sarah and Troyd Bowles for sponsoring this event.

Next week it is the February monthly medal, sponsored by Décor Services, the format is stroke-play, players are asked to sign in by 0900 hrs for a 0915 start.

UK reaffirms support for Falklands but Argentina says Islanders do not exist

MLA Sawle indicates the empty chair intended for the Argentine Foreign Minister who refused to attend a meeting between the British Foreign Secretary, MLA Sawle and MLA Cheek in London

THE British Foreign Secretary William Hague on Wednesday re-affirmed UK's support for the Falkland Islands at a meeting at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office that included Mr Hague and Falkland Islands Members of Legislative Assembly (MLA) Jan Cheek and Dick Sawle.

In a press release following the meeting, that was originally scheduled to include the Argentine Foreign Minister Timerman but rejected by him due to the presence of Falkland Islanders, who he claimed, "do not exist," Mr Hague said he was, "delighted," to host the meeting with the MLAs.

He said: "The Falkland Islands is a self governing British Overseas Territory and a thriving democracy with a growing economy. Through nine generations the people of the Falklands have worked tirelessly to establish their position in the world and their voice deserves to be heard. With this in mind, I welcome their forthcoming referendum in March. This will be a chance for the people of the Falkland Islands to express their views about how they wish to be governed, and in a democratic and incontestable way without other people speaking for them. They have the British Government's full support."

He said it was a shame that the Argentine Foreign Minister, Hector Timerman, was unwilling to join the meeting. He added: "As I have said before there is no way such a conversation could have taken place without members of the Falkland Islands Government being present, especially given the current Argentine government's behaviour towards the Islanders."

Mr Timerman was visiting the UK at the time in order to give presentations to people he claimed to be from groups of importance and who he said supported Argentina's demands for sovereignty negotiations.

At a press conference on Wednesday the Argentine Foreign Minister announced a "call to dialogue between UK and Argentina," saying the call was supported by representatives from 18 European countries.

Journalist Peter Pepper reporting for Penguin News at the conference noted, however, that a list of names of the delegates had not been made readily available to the press, but having obtained some names through alternative means it was his opinion: "The conference was obviously made up of Argentine supporters and addressed by Argentine supporters."

In the 'call to dialogue' Mr Timerman said that since 1965 negotiations had taken place over the Islands at the call of the United Nations, and that this had been interrupted by the 1982 war. The release noted: "Argentina is committed by its Constitution of 1994 to resolve the sovereignty dispute peacefully, respecting the interest of the islands inhabitants."

Mr Timerman made it clear during the week that the Argentine Government did not recognise the Government of the Falkland Islands and would only negotiate with the UK Government.

Earlier in the week the two Falklands representatives MLA Cheek and MLA Sawle flew to the UK with the aim of attending a meeting with Mr Hague that included Mr Timerman to hold a conversation on matters of "mutual interest."

Following Mr Timerman's refusal to attend MLA Sawle made an attempt to pass a letter to the Argentine Foreign Minister as the Minister left an All Party Parliamentary Group meeting; the letter was refused. The full text of the letter can be viewed on www.penguin-news.com

Mr Timerman told the UK press this week: "The Falkland Islanders do not exist. What exists is British citizens who live in the Islas Malvinas."

The two MLAs gave a number of interviews to the British press emphasising the Falkland Islanders' right to self-determination.

South Georgia death verdict

A VERDICT was delivered last Friday at the end of the inquest into the death of Eileen Larrimore in South Georgia, in January 2011.

The Coroner, Carl Gumsley, said that he would deliver a narrative verdict setting out a summary of what he found had happened. It was not his intention to make a judgment as to liability or blame.

The inquest heard that Mrs Larrimore died of multiple injuries sustained in a fall over a cliff, while a member of a walking party completing part of the Shackleton Walk between Fortuna Bay and Stromness. Her husband, Randall Larrimore, also went over the cliff while trying to save her, but survived the fall.

Mr and Mrs Larrimore were passengers on the expedition cruise ship Clipper Adventurer chartered by Zegrahm Expeditions.

The Coroner found that the accident happened off the official route that was set out in the South Georgia Government Visitor Management Plan. No warnings had been given that the route would contain cliffs and no expedition staff were present at the area where the fall had taken place.

The severity of Mrs Larrimore's injuries and the remote location made it very unlikely that she would have survived, but the Coroner concluded that the medical care received by Mrs Larrimore had not followed the recognised ABCDE method of dealing with trauma incidents.

Mr Gumsley said that he would be writing to Zegrahm, to the International Association of Antarctic Tour Operators (IAATO) and to the South Georgia Government to ask them to consider ways of making passengers aware of the lack of medical and rescue facilities available on South Georgia and the lack of medivac capabilities.

All these bodies would be asked to consider whether there should be improvements in the medical care provided on trips to such remote locations. The Coroner noted that the South Georgia Government had changed the wording of the Visitor Management Plan, after the incident, to make the requirement to follow the official route more prescriptive.

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

SOME years back, probably around the time John McCain and Barack Obama were battling it out in highbrow debates ahead of the US election, an interesting character called Larry Kilgore was coming off a run for the Senate in Texas.

Not being a particularly close follower of US politics, Kilgore probably wouldn't have even made it onto my radar, if mention hadn't been made on some programme or other, of his beliefs that not only should Texas be independent and that homosexuals be executed, but that judges should flog, "those convicted of fornication; of public use of vulgar sexual and excretory language; of sexually suggestive dress or behaviour and of intoxication."

Crazy? Well absolutely, but somehow he still managed 225,000 votes and is currently planning his campaign for governor in 2014: walking, talking proof then that Argentina doesn't have the monopoly on unhinged politicians (or voters).

In a comparison closer to home though, Kilgore's certifiably insane suggestions on how to deal with public 'misbehaviour' as he sees it, popped into my head very recently following the surprising decision to have the Royal Falkland Islands Police carry pepper spray. I comforted myself that at least when set against the Texan's insanity the path the RFIP were taking didn't seem quite so discomfoting.

Then again if it takes the policies of a total froth mouthed head-case to make ours look less loony I'm still not entirely convinced it's the best decision ever made.

Of course I sincerely support keeping safe our protectors of the peace, and as such the idea of wearing body cameras is a very reasonable one and I applaud the concept of a peaceful deterrent and one that will contribute to accurate evidence gathering. The idea, however, of officers carrying a weapon that can damage eyes and airways (and one that according to anecdotal evidence can lead to an increase in aggressive behaviour towards the carrier) seemed extraordinarily excessive in a community hardly known for full scale riots.

But anyway, to return to dotty Argentine legislators surely even Foreign Minister Hector Timerman's biggest fans must have gulped with mortification at his claim this week that, "we have been trying to find a peaceful solution (over the Falklands) for 180 years."

Bit of a blip in 1982 then.

And does his statement, that while we might have our 'interests' taken into consideration but certainly not our 'wishes' sound just the teensiest bit, erm, oppressive.

Hector this is Larry - you're going to get along just dandy.

Remembering Mike Stammers great friend of the Falklands

A GREAT friend of the Falklands, maritime archaeologist Mike Stammers has died.

Jim McAdam reports: "I am saddened to have to report the death of Mike Stammers (aged 69) after an illness which he bore with typical fortitude and optimism. Through his position in the Merseyside Maritime Museum, Mike had a passionate interest in the maritime archaeology of the Falklands, to which he made a huge contribution. He was Deputy Editor of the Falkland Islands Journal since 1991 and the unstinting help he gave and friendship he bestowed over those years were invaluable to me and his good friend and colleague, Rob Philpott, an equally passionate Falklands supporter. As recently as last week he was checking and commenting on articles for this year's Journal."

Rob Philpott writes "He was perhaps the colleague or former colleague I most respected, very generous with his wide specialist knowledge and his time, passionately interested in the subject.

a prolific writer and a thoroughly decent, kind and approachable man. It is a great shame we have lost someone who at 69 was still in the prime of his intellectual life."

One of the very positive aspects to take from his life and career is his output of scholarly articles and books, particularly his definitive work on the Jhelum (The Jhelum - A Victorian Merchant Ship with John Kearon, 1992) and other Falklands vessels. He also gave unstinting support, help and advice to John Smith and Joan Spruce when they were trying to establish what is now Stanley Museum in Britannia House.

A great friend of the Falklands, he will be sorely missed.

Amendment

THE group of logistic personnel marching for combat stress (as published in PN last week) will arrive at Government House on Saturday February 16 and not Sunday as PN was originally informed.

Planning and building news

FOUR applications were approved at the Planning and Building Committee on Thursday.

The Falkland Islands Museum and National Trust were granted permission to refurbish Central Stores on the Dockyard and make alterations to the stairs and windows, and a formation of a bridge to the Coffin Shop.

The British Antarctic Survey had consent renewed in order to site temporary high frequency radio array and associated huts at Goose Green until May 31, 2018, subject to the same conditions.

The Falkland Islands Company was granted permission to erect two painting sheds at Crozier Place, and the change of use of the Road Camp at Fox Bay to provide residential accommodation was approved for the Falkland Islands Government.

Mr R L Terrones was refused permission to erect a memorial and two plaques at land adjacent to Stanley Airport to commemorate all the pilots who died in the 1982 Falklands War. There were a number of complaints from the public noting that Argentina had their agreed memorial at Darwin Cemetery and more were not welcome: "This was not a valid planning reason," said Environmental Planning Officer Antony Payne. Gerald Cheek said it was a shame there was nothing in legislation that protected the public from something they would find distressing. The application was refused on the grounds that a memorial so close to the airport would attract visitors, and wreaths and items of remembrance left behind would pose a severe hazard to passengers and aircrew should they be picked up by the wind.

Ms J Clarke and Ms L Knight's application to change of use of the upstairs of their business, Bittersweet, to a café with acoustic music was deferred until the next committee meeting to assess the options of creating the required parking spaces for the application to be considered. It was also noted that though the area on John Street was surrounded by noisy venues and pubs, to minimise impact on surrounding residents, ensuring music was not amplified, should be a consideration.

Reviewing a busy few days in the courts

Fine and ban for Stanley car chase

ON November 15, fear that he was being pursued by an angry motorist whom he had overtaken on the Stanley By-pass Road, led to a chase through the centre of Stanley at speeds in excess of the legal limit for Malcolm Prior, the Stanley Magistrate's Court was told on Monday this week.

Unfortunately for Mr Prior, his supposition was correct, he was being pursued, not by an angry motorist, but by Chief Inspector Len McGill of the Royal Falkland Islands Police, who claimed that Mr Prior's Ford Everest had reached an indicated speed of 60mph on the By-pass Road where the legal limit is 40mph, and 43mph in Stanley where the legal limit is 25mph.

Mr Prior pleaded guilty to speeding in both the 40mph and 25mph zones, but disputed the indicated maximum speed, as the speedometer of Chief Inspector McGill's Land Rover, when later calibrated, indicated 40mph for an actual speed of 36mph.

With regard to the sequence of events described by prosecuting counsel, Alison Inglis, the Senior Magistrate said it was a complete mystery to him why Mr Prior should have chosen to overtake another vehicle on the By-pass Road, in the relatively short distance between the top of Philomel Street and Dairy Paddock Road and an even greater mystery why he should then have found it necessary to try to 'lose' the vehicle when it appeared to follow him.

The seriousness of the offence of speeding in the 25mph zone was the more serious of the two charges against Mr Prior, given that this occurred just before one o'clock in the afternoon at a time when the Stanley streets are normally at their busiest.

Taking into account Mr Prior's early guilty plea and previously unblemished driving record, the Senior Magistrate imposed a total of £540 in fines, with an additional £85 costs and banned Mr Prior from driving for 28 days.

Very last chance for offender

SENTENCING Robert Kiddle to an 18 month probation order in the Magistrate's Criminal Court on Monday, Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley told him that if he was found to be in breach, "there are no prizes for guessing what's going to happen to you."

Mr Kiddle had pleaded guilty to a charge of burglary and had admitted that on November 4, 2012 he had returned to the house of a friend, Scott Short, with whom he had earlier been drinking and had stolen a jar containing £105 in cash and a bottle of rum. He had spent some of the money on cat food and cigarettes.

Despite a history of previous offences described by the Senior Magistrate as, "appalling and going back many decades," it was noted by the court that Mr Kiddle had not been convicted of any dishonesty for over four years.

Mr Kiddle agreed with the Senior Magistrate's suggestion that his problem with alcohol was at the centre of his criminal lapses and was ordered to attend all meetings which he might be ordered to by the Probation Service and to be of good behaviour.

Fishing charges dropped

A CASE which was to have been brought against Antarctic Sea Fisheries SA for a breach of licensing conditions was discontinued in the Magistrate's Criminal Court on Monday February 4.

The case had centred around an allegation of hook discard, but the court heard from Senior Crown Counsel, Rosalind Check, that new evidence had become available regarding procedures on the company's vessel. This, taken together with a recent amendment of licensing conditions by the Director of Fisheries of the Government of South Georgia and the South Sandwich Islands (GSGSSI) had combined to create some ambiguity around the term 'discard', which was sufficient to merit that the case should be discontinued.

Accepting this argument, the Senior Magistrate, Carl Gumsley, decreed that the costs of the case should be paid from central funds, having assured himself that this would not involve the legal aid budget.

Charges amended but plea deferred and case adjourned

DANIEL Peter Rogers of Mount Pleasant Complex, who on his first appearance in the Stanley Summary Court on January 12, had not entered a plea on either of three charges of common assault against police officers and a further charge of resisting arrest, was in court again on Monday. The Crown was seeking to amend the status of the charges against him from common assault to causing actual bodily harm.

Crown Counsel Alison Inglis told the Senior Magistrate that the three police officers concerned were still suffering the physical consequences of Mr Rogers assault and therefore the damage alleged to have been caused to them by him was more serious than, "transient and trifling," which was the level of injury originally indicated by the charge of common assault.

Despite an early indication from defence counsel, Mark Neves, that his client, who was due to leave the Islands on February 15, was prepared to plead guilty on Monday to any of the charges that might be brought against him, the case was adjourned by the Senior Magistrate until February 15. This followed a disclosure by the prosecution, that contrary to a previous statement made by them to the court in good faith, it was now believed that Mr Rogers' case might be connected to another matter, the outcome of which might have some significant impact on it.

Before granting the adjournment asked for by the prosecution, Mr Gumsley told the defendant that while he could not prevent him from pleading guilty to any or all the charges brought against him in order to, "get it over with," he would be unhappy about coming to any decision about sentencing until he was in possession of all the facts surrounding the case.

The prosecution had asked for an adjournment for one week, but this had had to be extended because the court room would not be available, due to its use next week as a conference venue.

Bench 'perplexed' by new limit

MECHANIC Tyler Tellez admitted in court on Wednesday that he had been travelling at a speed of 37mph in his Range Rover on December 19, but had not realised that the section of the Airport Road he was on - between the Surf Bay turn-off and the airport - had recently been limited to 25mph instead of 40mph.

Senior Magistrate, Carl Gumsley, said that he found the reason for limiting this stretch of good tarmac road perplexing, but Mr Tellez had broken the law and he had no alternative but to punish him for it.

However, the fine of £50 imposed represented a sizeable reduction on what the sentencing guidelines would normally call for. He also upheld the prosecution's call for £85 costs to be paid by Mr Tellez.

Another mechanic, Christian Ian Minto, was also in court for speeding on Wednesday and received a fine of £150 for travelling at 56mph on the MPA road near Bluff Cove. Mr Minto was ordered to pay £85 costs and fined an additional £30 because his road tax licence was ten days out of date.

On Wednesday, Lucas Biggs, was fined £200 and made to pay £85 prosecution costs after admitting driving at 35mph on Ross Road West on December 16.

The Magistrate's Court heard that Mr Biggs's excessive speed had been recorded by a static speed check located near the Battle of the Falklands Monument, at 8.58pm on a fine, clear evening as he was heading West in front of Government House.

Also on Wednesday, Rene Saldivia, pleaded guilty to two other driving offences.

On Friday January 25, a police patrol had observed that Mr Saldivia's tax disc on his Suzuki Vitara was out of date, on which grounds they stopped him the following evening and later gave him a roadside breath test.

A later test indicated that he was just over the permitted limit.

Mr Gumsley told Mr Saldivia that he had no alternative but to ban him from driving for one year and imposed fines totalling £465.

Trial dates set

THREE young local men: David Hewitt, Toby Poole and Jacob Riddell appeared before Justices of the Peace: Ruth Taylor (Chair), Anton Livermore and Paul Freer, on Tuesday charged with using threatening and abusive words and behaviour against a Canadian oil worker, Mr Stephen Cole.

All three defendants, who were in the dock together, had previously appeared in court on December 12 as witnesses, when Mr Cole had himself appeared before the Senior Magistrate to plead not guilty to a similar public order offence.

The three defendants, only one of whom had sought legal representation, pleaded not guilty and the case was adjourned to allow the prosecution time to call witnesses for a trial, which it is expected will take one day and will begin at 10am on April 1, 2013.

A trial date of February 19 was also set for MPA worker, Rodrigo Ramos Rubilar who faces two charges of assault by beating. These offences are alleged to have occurred at MPA on November 24 and 25, 2012.

Mr Rubilar was strongly advised by the Senior Magistrate to seek the assistance of a lawyer in the meantime.

The case against Benji Mark Wade, 16yrs, who was in court to face charges relating to a motor vehicle was adjourned till February 15 to allow for further clarification of police evidence.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Gavin Short shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

I AM standing in for Jan this week whilst she and Dick are over in the UK correcting any inaccuracies that may be spouted by H Timerman esq. on his visit to the Old Country (and I am sure there will be quite a few) plus they will also, I am certain, be having one or two very useful meetings and press sessions whilst over there.

It has been a pretty full throttle ten days or so, most of it internationally focused with US congressman Thomas Petri and aides Derek Mix, Miguel Mendoza and Peter Quilter departing on last Saturday's LAN after a week in the Falklands. The congressman made an observation which in itself is most interesting. Wisconsin, for whom he is a senator, was only founded in 1848, which is well after our ancestors arrived in the Falklands. Following the Argentine logic, the people of Wisconsin probably aren't to be recognised as the rightful inhabitants or have any human rights at all. I do think the congressman goes away a happy man, as a group of youngsters were overheard calling him "Mr President" when talking to him.

We were pleased to welcome from Chile, Hernan Errazuriz (former minister and Chilean Ambassador to the US) and Miguel Schweitzer (former Secretary of State and Chilean ambassador in the UK 1980 - 83) who arrived on Saturday's flight. As with other guests, I am sure they will return to Chile with a much better and deeper understanding of our country and its people and their wishes.

By the time you read this Jan and Dick should be back together with the first group of delegates from the many countries who are participating in the 43rd CPA regional branch meeting here in the Falklands. The remainder of the delegates will be arriving on Saturday's LAN flight. It was a pleasure to briefly meet the Hon Raymond Williams who is the delegate from St Helena who decided that rather than wait on ASI, he would spend some extra time here in the Falklands.

On the domestic front it is good to see the road gang in full swing up on the Bypass road. It must be pretty nerve wracking for them as the project is being closely followed by about 2000 road experts (myself included). The museum building is starting to take shape and the PWD move out is still on schedule.

Seats at Stanley-hosted CPA regional conference

THE theme of the 43rd British Islands and Mediterranean Region Annual Conference hosted in Stanley from February 12 is to be Self-determination and its role in Self Governance and Devolution.

The open sessions have been announced, however, it has been emphasised that seats are limited and if anyone wishes to reserve one then they should contact celifford@sec.gov.fk or cprior@sec.gov.fk before noon on Monday February 11, 2013.

The opening ceremony will take place at 0900 on February 12 with the Plenary Session 1: Self-Determination and its role in Self Governance and Devolution starting at 1015 and chaired by Margaret Mitchell MSP with the Rt Hon The Baroness Scotland of Asthal QC as lead speaker.

MLA Mike Summers will chair the Plenary Session 2: Arguments about Self-Determination and this will begin at 1345. The Lead Speaker will be Professor Michael Keating.

Plenary Session 3: The Right to Self Determination is not curtailed by Sovereignty Claims, begins on Wednesday at 0900 chaired by MLA Sharon Halford and will include a speech written by Fabian Picardo Chief Minister of Gibraltar and delivered by the Hon Samantha Sacramento MP.

Session 1 Lead Speaker
Baroness Scotland of Asthal

At 1345 the Open Plenary: Experiences in the Development of Greater Regional and National Autonomy, will begin. MLA Dick Sawle will Chair with Hon Isobel Ellul-Hammond (Gibraltar) as Rapporteur. Delegates will be given five minutes to speak by show of hands.

At 1500 there will be a round up of key points from conference with MLA Jan Cheek as Chair and Rapporteurs the Hon Juan Watterson MHC (IoM), the Hon Tony Wild MLC (IoM) and the Hon Isobel Ellul-Hammond (Gibraltar).

The closing session will be at 1530 with speakers Keith Biles, MLA Dick Sawle and The Rt Hon Sir Alan Haselhurst MP.

Time to be kind

CABLE & Wireless is encouraging everyone to join them again in Random Act of Kindness week (RAK) which runs from February 11 to 15, 2013.

Sara Loftus, Head of Retail & Customer Services for Cable & Wireless explained, "being kind doesn't have to cost you anything and the size of the gesture isn't important; they can be spontaneous or planned in advance

"Either way they are encouraged around the world as a way of spreading goodwill in the community. You could pay an unexpected visit to a friend or relative or a buy someone a coffee to brighten their day.

"We are delighted that since starting RAK week three years ago other individuals and businesses have joined us and performed their own RAKs. Of course we would hope people are always nice, but it's good to have a week where people make that extra special effort. We have found people were genuinely surprised at how good a small gesture makes them feel. We look forward to surprising the community again and hope that others around the Islands join us."

Every day next week the C&W RAK team will be surprising people around the Islands with Random Acts of Kindness; look out it could be you.

Call Samaritans

DID you know that you can share your troubles with a trained counsellor at any time of the day or night?

Did you know that you can telephone the Samaritans UK from a Falkland Islands' freephone land line 51515 (sponsored by C&W) and receive all the support you can imagine.

Team Tranquil is currently promoting the continued availability of the service, and a spokesperson for the local organisation explained: "The call from that number is forwarded from the Islands to UK and that cost is charged to Team Tranquil so it would cost you nothing but your time to get the help you want at any time of day or night... and always it is confidential."

Also, if you feel you have the skills and interest to join the dedicated group at Team Tranquil, please give the Treasurer Ruth Taylor a call on 22169.

She said: "Age is no restriction to joining in and making local projects come to fruition. We meet for an hour every two months so it is not time consuming and means only a maximum of six meetings a year for you to make a difference.

"Just look at what a difference the painting of the Camber Stones has made to the look of Stanley."

All over for cruise ship Orlova

ONE time frequent summer visitor to the Falklands, the expedition cruise ship Lyubov Orlova is now said to be adrift in international waters off the coast of Canada.

The Russian built Lyubov Orlova, which is a sister ship to Clipper Adventurer was seized at St John's, Newfoundland, reportedly due to unpaid debts of US$251,000 owed to the charterer, Cruise North Expeditions after a cruise was cancelled due to faults with the vessel.

The vessel, which ran aground at Deception Island in 2006, but was towed off safely, was again being towed, this time from St John's to a breakers yard in the Dominican Republic when its tow line snapped south-east of St John's leaving it adrift.

A further attempt to tow the derelict vessel also failed when another tow line snapped in seven-metre-high waves and 140 kilometre-an-hour winds. At this point Canadian officials decided it was too dangerous to try to re-attach the line to the former Russian cruise ship in those high seas.

Federal agency Transport Canada is reported as saying it will not pursue the drifting Lyubov Orlova

since the cruise ship has officially entered international waters.

A spokesperson said the Russian vessel is no longer a threat to the safety of offshore oil platforms, its personnel, or the marine environment. It is felt unlikely that the vessel which has a tracking device and was last spotted some 250 nautical miles east of St John's will re-enter Canadian waters, given the current patterns and predominant winds.

Transport Canada said in a release on Saturday night that they had decided not to pursue the vessel because it would be a safety risk to the Canadian sailors. The department said the owners of the vessel have been made aware of the current status of the ship and they are responsible for it.

If left alone, it is thought that she could end up almost anywhere from the Norwegian arctic, to western Africa, or stuck in the middle of the North Atlantic gyre.

The Lyubov Orlova had been tied up in the St. John's harbour for more than two years.

Give us two minutes...

10. What would your 'Mastermind' specialist subject be?

Re-writing Argentine history to avoid any reference to previously existing peoples and genocidal campaigns waged against them, but to place special emphasis on how the perfidious British ethnically cleansed the Falkland Islands for their own colonialistic purposes in 1833 and defied our attempts to impose a peaceful solution to the sovereignty dispute in 1982.

(Sadly, but not surprisingly, Mr Timerman did not himself supply this column's content, but following his example, we decided to make it up anyway.)

More stories from a very ordinary house

FURTHER to last week's article about 63 Fitzroy Road: 'A house so ordinary that it is special,' Ian Gleadell tells us that it was built by his father Mark Gleadell and Thomas Mills, Jenny Macaskill's grandfather, for the princely sum of £500.

Ian also says that the cement blocks from which the bakery was made came from a cinema belonging to the West Yorkshire Regiment, who were stationed in Stanley during the Second World War and constructed an extensive camp, mainly out of Nissen huts, located to the West of Stanley, just before you get to where the Mink Park Development is now.

The bakery was the Woodbine Bakery and its running soon became a two man operation; Ian's dad made the bread and Aub Summers, Uncle of Brian Summers, made the cakes for which he became famous.

Ian is now 77 and although he is not sure of the exact construction date of either the house in which he lived as a boy, or the bakery, he remembers helping load the ovens when he was about twelve.

Ian told Penguin News that he was was keen to know whether there was still a small round hole in one of the bakery's windows, which he made while practising casting with his dad's new fishing rod.

Falklands laws

RECENT coverage in the PN ("Senior Magistrate Cross-examined", January 18 & "Neglected Laws", January 25) may have given readers the impression that the Falkland Islands Government is not doing anything about access to the law or, worse has no interest in doing anything about the issue.

However, access to Falkland Islands Laws is a matter which the government and the Attorney General's Chambers have been working on for some time. The introduction of plain language drafting some years ago was a first step which had immediate effect in new and amending laws.

The issues involved in improving access to the law are complex (in particular in connection with establishing what UK laws apply in the Falkland Islands). In a context where there has been a lack of investment in publication and revision of laws for almost a decade, the solutions are not obvious, straight-forward or cheap.

Executive Council has approved two projects, both of which are focussed on the publication of a set of revised laws which people can easily access and understand.

In April 2012 ExCo approved an action plan for publication of revised laws. The work has been awarded to two law revision experts who are due to report in May with recommendations on the best way to move to publication of revised laws. However it is fair to say that implementing the plan is likely to cost a large amount of money and may take years to complete.

In October 2012, ExCo also approved the appointment of a specialist legislative drafter to produce Bills to replace existing fragmented laws on criminal procedure and crime. This work is underway and we hope that in six months time we will have draft legislation to present to ExCo.

FIG is committed to improving public access to laws of the Falkland Islands. The work will take time and money, but considerable funds have already been allocated to the two projects. The will is there to make available to the people of the Falkland Islands a set of laws that is accessible and easy to understand.

Norwegian model and the MPA Road

IN an article in Penguin News of January 25 it was reported that at Standing Finance Committee the first steps had been taken towards a Sovereign Wealth Fund, based on the Norwegian model, by a transfer of £8.274m into a new Oil Development Reserve Fund. At the time of writing this letter I haven't been able to access any public paper on any policy consideration by Executive Council concerning these two new funds and I can't recall any public consultation about them.

I don't know what is meant by "first steps" in this context as the names of the funds indicate entirely separate purposes?

What is clear is that the creation of any new funds will enable government to squirrel away more so-called windfall revenues for special purposes while taxes and charges are kept at current or increased levels to help fund ordinary purposes.

The "Norwegian model" is an interesting concept and should be investigated along with other models for its appropriateness to our unique situation.

Norway has a very high standard of infrastructure. During a voyage along the coast of Norway a few years ago I found the standard of ports infrastructure pretty impressive. No timber decked jetties but solid concrete quays. The road from the international airport to the capital city of Oslo was paved. I wonder, did the "Norwegian model" for a Sovereign Wealth Fund come before or after Norway's infrastructure was brought up to scratch? How distant a memory are dust baths in the summer and clay washes in the winter for the Norwegians travelling to and from their international airport?

I ask MLAs that the "Norwegian model", or whatever model is selected, be extended beyond just stacking money on its edges so that the national disgrace of the MPA Road can become a distant memory for us also before too many more years elapse.

Contrasting Timermans

HELLO from London, where Hector Timerman has just launched what he is describing as "Malvinas Week".

This will, I expect, be a festival of righteous petulance, staged on the nuttier fringes of the British political, academic and journalistic theatres.

Certainly there will be no major performance at the Foreign Office, since Mr Timerman refused to meet with Foreign Secretary Hague if Islanders were to be present - a condition which Mr Hague and the Prime Minister had firmly imposed.

On waking today and reading the online news about "Malvinas Week", I tweeted that I would say no more about this, unless Mr Timerman self-immolated in Parliament Square. And I intend to stick to this, except to say the following about the man himself.

Considering his honourable pedigree, I find it difficult to understand how Hector Timerman can be so militantly opposed to anyone exercising the right of free speech. He might well see Islanders as an impediment to Argentine progress in the dispute, but in his heart of hearts does he really believe they should not express their views in discussions about their homeland, even if they are, "implanted people?"

I say this because his family name is indelibly linked to the fight for free speech in South America. Those whose memories stretch back to the truly horrible days of military dictatorship in Argentina may recall that Hector's father, Jacobo Timerman, was a courageous symbol of opposition to the regime.

Timerman senior was a greatly respected left-wing editor and columnist who angered the military by speaking out against their murderous clampdown on freedom. (He was also Jewish, which may further have inflamed the anti-Semitic military's ire.)

Briefly - and perhaps, because of his youth, he can be forgiven - Hector edited a publication that supported the military regime. But by all accounts he soon saw the error of his ways, turned to the left and eventually began campaigning as a human rights activist.

But his more famous and brave father stood up to them from the beginning and suffered for it. Jacobo was arrested, tortured and came within a hair's breadth of summary execution. Only his international celebrity saved him. Jacobo went into exile, where he wrote the seminal book about the brutal injustices of Argentina in the 1970s and early 1980s. I read and was tremendously impressed by Prisoner Without a Name, Cell Without a Number.

Since becoming a front bench Argentine politician, Hector appears to have conveniently forgotten all of this. I am sure Timerman junior is actually proud of his dad, and finds some convoluted moral reasoning to justify his stand against freedom. But I wonder if he ever considers how Jacobo might view his support for the dogmatic, repressive and right wing government that not only seeks to silence Islanders, but also tries to gag Argentina's press.

If Jacobo was alive (he died in 1999), he would, I believe, still be an iconoclastic journalist, wary of propaganda and poisonous jingoism, and fighting for the right of free speech, both in the press at home, and as it applies to minority peoples.

It follows that he might be wagging a finger at his son, reminding him of the principle to which he adhered at the cost of imprisonment and torture. "You don't have agree with them," he might say. "But even those annoying Kelpers have the right to speak and to be heard."

Remembering Mike Stammers

One of many maritime books written by Mike Stammers

WITH the death of Mike Stammers, both the Falklands and the wide world of maritime history have lost a good friend.

Mike, who was for many years, a curator with the Merseyside Maritime Museum, lent his expertise to the museum in Stanley during a difficult period from 1982. The Government had given the large Argentine building known as LADE House to the Museum, which was then in the care of John Smith. John and his local colleagues worked hard to give the collections the best home they had had since the destruction of the first Town Hall, helped by Mike Stammers' advice. The result was a folksy and welcoming establishment where visitors could enjoy discovering the diversity and depth of Falklands history.

The particular object of Mike Stammers' academic passions was, however, the Jhelum. This massive timber-built East Indian man lay beached but fairly intact just a few hundred yards from the museum, and Mike was able to study the Jhelum in great detail, before the wind and tide took its destructive toll. Some 25 years on from his work, only the stern of this important ship still stands above the harbour waves.

The Charles Cooper, a hulk beached opposite the West Store, was also a subject for Mike's forensic academic study. He published an important book about the Charles Cooper (see image left) one of the first vessels to operate a scheduled service between Britain and the United States. Today, that old square rigger too has gone.

I met Mike when I was the manager of the Tourist Board. We had identified Stanley's rich maritime history as a possible tourist attraction, although the topic had to be interpreted and presented to visitors in a way they could easily and enjoyably consume.

Between Mike and I, and with important advice from John Smith and my brother Mensun, we came up with the Stanley Harbour Maritime History Trail. We wrote a short guidebook, and Mike drew in help from the Merseyside Maritime Museum's tourism experts, who created written and illustrated panels that were erected at key points along the seafront. I like to think that many visitors enjoyed reading about Stanley's shipping history, then striking out on foot to discover it for themselves.

One has to accept that it is almost impossible to preserve all of the ghosts of Cape Horn forever. But thanks to academics, historians and enthusiasts like Mike Stammers, we have at least been able to learn from them and preserve our knowledge.

HMS Edinburgh waves a fond farewell

Ship's bell commemorates the year she was commissioned

KNOWN as the 'Fortress of the Sea', HMS Edinburgh is the largest and the last Type 42 destroyer to serve in the Royal Navy. She finished her six month tour of the South Atlantic Islands yesterday and is due to be decommissioned in June, but before heading north again Stanley residents were given the opportunity on Saturday to have a peek on board.

Open days are held on most tours said Commander Nick Borbone: "They are a good way of showing what the Royal Navy is all about. People who have no contact with the sea don't necessarily see the relevance and applicability of maritime forces so it's a good opportunity to show what we do."

The Commander said he has enjoyed his time in the Falklands. This being his second tour he was particularly glad to see the abundance of wildlife over summer: "I have more photos of penguins than I know what to do with but my family are looking forward to the slide shows when I return home."

Flight Observer Russ Chandler has had the privilege of viewing the Islands by Lynx helicopter. "We've visited Saunders, Pebble Island and the Neek and luckily get to fly every four days or so. We've been lucky too with the weather and there is a professional photographer on board who has captured some great shots of the wildlife," he said.

MA Sasha Noates, one of the three medics on board, was assigned to HMS Edinburgh only on Tuesday: "The travel is a great part of my job and the Falklands has been a real surprise; I couldn't find the cash machine but Stanley is a lovely town. In the last nine months this is the third place I've been deployed to."

The next ship to tour the South Atlantic will be HMS Argyll, a Type 23 'Duke' Class Frigate.

This system is served by a series of five repeaters. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

YET another fortnight of unpredictable weather.

Just over a week ago the girls had ever so slightly moved the garden sprinkler I had put on to water in some more plants put in the 'stumpery' the night before. Having got themselves into swim suits they were having a wonderful time dashing in and out of the water in bright, warm sunshine and now they are sitting under the table in make believe tents while the cold wind howls around the house. Who can tell what is coming next?

My Aunt in Punta Arenas wrote that they had 140 kilometre winds a couple of days ago and we seem to be going to get the same. I guess it does not bode well for the Mini Sports. Mind you, reading some old diaries given to us a few years ago I notice that this is exactly the same weather we had here in 1938. Perhaps the same will occur in another 75 years time?

As predicted, the cherries have been blown out of the tree. I really must cut that down to manageable proportions so we can put a net around it next year. Beside it are three other trees Mum had planted some years ago: two of them are apple trees and they have got fruit on them. They are small and green at the moment but who knows what they might come to?

Over time we have added to this mini 'orchard' some more apples, a plum and a few others such as a Prunus known as the sloe plum. This gets used in gin to make sloe gin. Meanwhile I have been picking some calafates (Berberis) which make superb pies and jams and even better jellies and, they also make a wonderful liqueur when soaked in gin, maybe in vodka too?

While on the subject of fruit

Garlic of "a very respectable size," drying off

picking, my little helpers started picking red currants for me last week and the first couple of kilos are in the freezer. Also in the freezer are a lot of containers full of rhubarb, which I cooked first. I've this done for my own convenience and because I prefer to cook it in large quantities in a slow cooker, it is then ready to use with other fruit, or with a crumble topping, or as a pie.

We have been using some of the onions I planted in the Autumn, they are not particularly big, but they had stopped growing. They certainly make the eyes water. The garlic also planted outside last Autumn has grown to a very respectable size and I harvested most of during this past week. The last few had to be dried off inside a tunnel as it had become a little damp outside.

Also in the freezer are the first few kilos of baby carrots, which were done in 1/2 kilo batches with a tablespoon of water, put into the microwave for 3 minutes first, before being rinsed and drained, then frozen. The way things are going we shall have to invest in another deep freezer, not to mention a 'lean-to' to fit everything into.

Over the years, we have collected several greenhouses, tunnels and cold frames. All have been named after the person we got them from. In some cases sadly, these friends are no longer with us and so we remember them in this way. In other cases it's just because it is easier for us to ask, "Has so-and-so been watered/closed or whatever?" Rather than having to describe it and its location.

We were very fortunate to be given another one last week. This one will simply be known as 'Moody Brook' and it is quite fitting, as this is how we came to meet. Bill, having found he is enjoying gardening after all, is going to take it over and grow some goodies in there. A little competition at last; this will make gardening even more enjoyable!

The various brassicas are looking very healthy and finally growing away well. They look strong enough to withstand the winds this time, but maybe I'd better not crow too soon.

The peas are starting to fill out. Although at the moment they are a bit covered in chickweed, they don't seem to mind. However, as they need to be tied in again I will have to remedy the weed situation soon.

At least, the cooler weather has made it more comfortable to get some work done in the tunnels and now most of the weeds are, once again, under control, with the strawberries tidied up and many of the early potatoes dug out, although many more remain. If the potatoes growing outside are half as good, we shall have a bumper crop but I won't count my chickens yet as they seem inclined to want to flower a little too early for my liking.

The pumpkins inside are producing a massive amount of female flowers but the male ones are also available to fertilise them, so they've got it together this time.

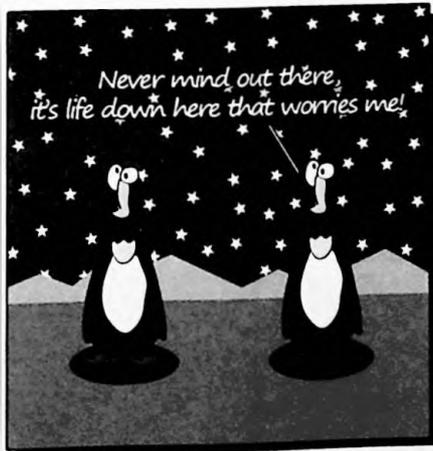

The peppers are well ahead and forming quite a few fruit. The tomatoes need tying in again but are dripping with fruit as are the marrows.

We could be using them as courgettes but I find those to be an acquired taste. To me they are very much a pretty watery vegetable and I much prefer turnips or young swedes for flavour. However, adult marrows are great, and we've had a few of those. The squash and cucumbers are way behind them at the moment though.

Argos donate Archery bosses

Peter tests the new bosses

THE Falklands Archery Association gratefully received a generous donation of four large foam bosses from Argos Limited last Friday evening. The presentation took place with Peter Thompson of Argos handing over the bosses to attending committee members. The club would like to once again thank Argos Limited for their continued support.

The Archery association will be greatly benefitted by the bosses, and they will help prepare those going to the Guernsey Games by allowing members to shoot carbon arrows which are more expensive to replace.

Glenn wins February Décor medal

A STRONG field of fourteen golfers signed in to contest this season's February Medal once again sponsored by Décor Services; one of our club's main sponsors.

In the mostly fair weather conditions, players generally managed to score really well, and for some only one or two miserable holes marred their score cards.

Troyd Bowles carried his solid January form into February with a tidy round of 72 for a nett 67 and a third place finish.

Ian Stewart shot a fine round of 75 for a nett 65 and second place.

The best round of the day was neatly put together by Glenn Ross who shot 71 for a nett 65 and a win on a countback.

Richard Bonner had the good skill and appalling misfortune, as it turned out, of holing out his provisional ball from the 11th tee. Such a superb shot normally records a hole in one, or at worst a par if the first ball is indeed lost. The original ball was soon found and remained the ball in play.

The member and non-member event on Wednesday evening attracted 10 pairs of club golfers and prospective members and resulted in some fine Stableford scoring over the front nine holes.

Taking the first prize and membership for the rest of this season on a superb 23 points was Carole Lee's partner, Mark Dodd, who played excellent golf and nearly holed out from the 7th tee.

Next week it is the Blue Riband event in our golfing calendar, The Stanley Open, the winner of which is rightly considered the club champion.

The format is two days of strokeplay golf with the lowest aggregate scratch score winning the trophy and considerable posing rights for the next twelve months.

This promises to be an exciting event with around a dozen players with a fair chance of winning. The usual suspects will no doubt be there or thereabouts when the last flag is replaced but many are anticipating something of a twist this year and the possible crowning of a new champion.

Players are asked to sign in on Saturday by 1345 for a 1400 start.

Jigger jumpers

WITH the harbour beginning to fill up with jiggers this week in anticipation of the start of the Illex fishing season at 6pm yesterday, it would appear that once again some crew members of these ships may seek to take advantage of a rare landfall to leave their vessels.

At around 4pm on February 13, the Fisheries Department was advised that two crew members from a jigger had arrived at KEMH, having presumably jumped from their vessel in Stanley Harbour.

A statement from Director of Natural Resources, John Barton, revealed that the two fishermen were Vietnamese from the Taiwanese jigger Hua Sheng 669 and had indicated that they were the only crew members who had left the jigger.

Further investigations into this incident will be handled by Customs and Immigration and Royal Falkland Islands Police.

At the time of going to press yesterday, some 50 jiggers out of an expected 100 had arrived in Stanley harbour to collect their licences.

Resignations

A NUMBER of resignations from the Government Service have been announced this week.

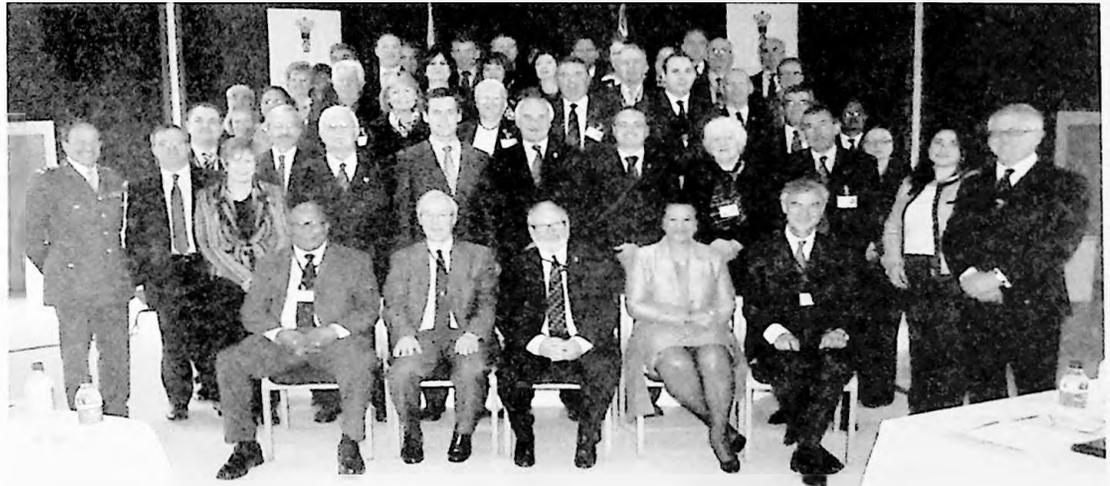

Most surprising, perhaps was the announcement early this week of the resignation of the Director of Health and Social Services, Mr David Jenkins for what were described as "personal reasons".

Mr Jenkins, who was previously Director of Education and Health, recently had his post re-designated as part of the recommendations made in the Review of the Review of Government undertaken last year by Mrs Irene Lucas.

At his week's meeting of the Education Board it was announced that the head teacher of the Infant and Junior School will be leaving in August of this year. Mr Hill will be replaced by local teacher Mrs Karen Steen.

Deputy Head of the Community School, Mrs Helen Bell, who filled the post of Acting Head for a considerable period, will also be leaving her post in August after what were described by the Education Board as "a number of years of outstanding service to the school."

Strong support for Falklands right to self-determination at CPA Regional Conference

Delegates, speakers and observers at the beginning of the 43rd British Islands and Mediterranean Regional Annual Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association

THE Falkland Islands this week hosted the 43rd British Islands and Mediterranean Region (BIMR) Annual Conference of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA).

On Tuesday, some 37 delegates and observers from over a dozen legislatures assembled in the Town Hall with Falkland Islands elected representatives and officials for the beginning of the two-day conference.

The theme of the conference was "Self-Determination and its Role in Self Governance and Devolution," peculiarly apt for discussion in the Falkland Islands given recent statements from Argentina's Foreign Minister and our own up-coming referendum on the Islands preferred political status.

It was clearly not the purpose of the conference to devote itself solely to the Falkland Islands situation and with Scotland also on the brink of a referendum, unlikely, but two of the three guest speakers did take the opportunity offered to voice their support for the Falklands right to self-determination.

First of these was the Rt Hon Baroness Scotland of Asthal QC, who, although a former minister in a Labour administration, prefaced an interesting talk on legal aspects of self-determination in the post colonial world with firm support for the present British government's robust stance on the matter of Falkland Islands sovereignty.

The Baroness firmly rebutted the suggestion by the Argentine Government that the current population of the Falklands had been 'implanted' and questioned their amnesia over the subject of the Convention of Settlement between the governments of Britain and Argentina, ratified by both sides in Buenos Aires on 15 May

Further robust support for the Falklands position came in an address to the 3rd plenary session by the Chief Minister of Gibraltar, the Hon Fabian Picardo MP, delivered in his unavoidable absence by Gibraltar MP, The Hon Samantha Sacramento.

Mr Picardo described how, the world began to change after World War II from a "privilege-based model" with the consequent emergence of concepts of fundamental human rights and freedoms, which are exemplified in the provisions of the Charter of the United Nations and the European Convention of Human Rights.

Reviewing the sometimes dubious way in which the List of Non-Self-Governing Territories was compiled, leading to the establishment of the UN's Special Committee on Decolonisation, Mr Picardo talked of the NIMBY-ism by which allegedly modern and progressive democracies like Spain and Argentina "could sign up to high-minded principles such as the right of individuals to determine their own future and defend such concepts around the world as good democrats - but not in their back yard."

It was unfortunate, said Mr Picardo, that neither Spain nor Argentina "were clever enough to bury their expansionist nationalism with the dictators that exemplified such causes."

In the face of the "mental gymnastics" of those who would try to claim that an "unalienable right" to self-determination was somehow "alienable", eternal vigilance was necessary, if the law of "might is right" was not to prevail. Mr Picardo concluded.

Penguin News

Comment by Deputy Editor John Fowler

ONE of the proclaimed purposes of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA) is to allow legislators from countries within the Commonwealth an opportunity to share, and gain from, the experiences of others. The theme of this week's Regional Annual Conference in Stanley was, "Self-determination and its role in self-governance and devolution" which might seem to have been tailor-made for our present circumstances in the Falkland Islands. However, it was apparent by the end of the first day both that this was a theme of universal relevance and also that in exercising our right to self-determination, we are part of a vast assembly of nations and other groups from whose experiences we have much to learn.

While the address of the opening speaker, the Rt Hon the Baroness Scotland of Asthal began with a ringing endorsement of the present UK Government's position over the sovereignty dispute with Argentina, she soon moved on to give examples of the many different models that exist for the expression of a right which is enshrined in the Charter of the United Nations.

During the Baroness's excellent address, it became evident that self-determination not only could take many more forms than we might have realised, but could also be a progressive exercise. It was not, therefore, a case of either declarations of independence or the maintenance of the status quo, but a necessarily iterative process.

More food for thought was to come when the next speaker, Professor Michael Keating, examined the concept of self-determination and ran through a bewildering variety of criteria for deciding to whom the right to self-determination ought to apply. While the very concept of self-determination seemed by the minute to be getting far more complicated than his listeners might hitherto have supposed, what emerged as being an essential ingredient was the application of the democratic process.

The referendum to be held in March is part of this process, but in one sense, while the question calls for a positive response, it is perhaps prompted, at least in part, by our tendency to define ourselves in terms of a negative. We know we do not wish to become part of Argentina, but what has begun to emerge from the semantic mists of the past week is the increasing need to make an informed, positive and democratic choice about where we do want to go. If nothing else, the CPA Conference this week has shown us some options.

Malamute tales

IJS students enjoy the book with teacher Mrs Stanworth

ON Wednesday, photographer Mr Norman Clark kindly passed on a donation of two books to the Infant and Junior School and Falkland Islands Community School libraries, written by Mrs Angela Perry MBE, Secretary to the Falkland Islands Memorial Chapel.

In a letter to Mr Clark, Mrs Perry explained that the hero of her stories, Alfie the Malamute dog, is also her real-life pet and he has already attracted quite a following in the local primary schools in her area.

She writes the tales as a hobby and says she was inspired to write the Alfie stories because the real life creature is so quirky. "You can almost see what he's thinking," she wrote.

Mrs Perry hopes the amusing real life stories, embellished with a dab of fiction for fun, will be enjoyed by all children and that the moral behind each tale can be appreciated. "My aspiration for these books is to help teach children the importance of traditional values – no cartoons – just good education and quality illustrations" she said.

Minefield clearance

THE BACTEC team is now fully deployed, clearing three minefields: two in the vicinity of Mile Pond and Mullet Creek and the third south of the water tanks on the Stanley to Darwin and Goose Green Road.

A number of anti personnel mines have been located and these are to be destroyed on 16th February 2013. There will therefore be a planned controlled demolition of these mines between 3pm and 5pm. In addition to clearing these minefields BACTEC is also carrying out more land release work on Stanley Common within the fenced area north of the Mile Pond.

On Sunday February 17 BACTEC will be processing Minefield 28 which lies just on the north side of the Stanley to Goose Green and Darwin road. This minefield was cleared in 1982 but up to now no verification has been carried out and the minefield is still classified as dangerous and fenced. BACTEC will process the area within the minefield fence using the remote controlled armoured flail assisted by a number of deminers.

As the flail may throw rock onto the road, traffic control measures will be in operation during February 17 from 7am to 7pm for the safety of road users. Disruption to traffic will be minimised but some delay may be experienced by road users. Please be patient.

Overall, the programme is progressing well and it is expected that it will be completed by 24 March releasing an additional 800,000 square miles for public use while at the same time reducing the number of remaining minefields by four.

Whale stranding at Fitzroy

A SMALL stranding of long-finned pilot whales at Pleasant Roads beach was reported to Falklands Conservation (FC) on February 11. A team of FC staff, volunteers and Nick Rendell (Environmental Officer) visited the site on Monday February 12.

A total of 22 adults had stranded over the weekend and had already died prior to the team's arrival. A further 30 whales that were reported swimming in the shallows near the stranded animals were not evident in the vicinity and it is hoped that they had moved off into deeper waters.

Pilot whales are the most common cetacean species to strand on the Falklands' shores.

Dr Andy Stanworth of FC explained, "cetaceans are difficult to study due to their lives at sea and when strandings occur at an accessible location, valuable information about the species can be collected if it is done before the bodies deteriorate and are scavenged by birds.

On this occasion, information on the body condition and sex were gathered and samples taken that can be used to determine the ages and genetics of individuals within the pod."

Sarah Crofts of FC added "The stranded individuals appeared in healthy condition and consisted of both males and females. The largest individual was approximately 6m long and the smallest, a female at just under 4m.

There were no obvious reasons why the animals stranded, although remains of other cetaceans at this site suggest that this shallow sandy beach is susceptible to such events". Thanks to those individuals who reported the incident and Alan Eagle, manager of Fitzroy Farm

Our islands our history book

FIGO hosted a reception on Wednesday February 6, to mark the publication of 'Our Islands Our History'.

Around thirty guests from the media, Parliament and the Foreign Office, attended the event.

Hon Dick Sawle MLA gave a short speech welcoming the guests and stressing the importance of the publication – especially in light of Argentina's version of the Islands history which had been widely promoted by the Argentine Foreign Minister during his visit to London.

He congratulated former Governor, David Tatham CMG, on his work in putting the booklet together. David Tatham thanked those who had assisted him with the task and stressed how vital it was to get the history of the Islands understood and to illustrate the important contribution to the development and success of the Islands by the people who had lived there over the generations.

Yacht visit

THE sizeable Yacht Erica XII departed Stanley last Saturday after it called to drop off passengers before proceeding to the west coast of South America.

Erica XII was launched in 2007, it has an aluminium hull construction, is 172ft long with 31ft beam and is equipped with Caterpillar V12 engine of 1100 horse power. The Mast is 192ft high and she carries 1272 square metres of sail which can under good conditions give a sailing speed of 15 knots.

The Captain of Erica XII had visited Stanley previously on the Super Yacht Adele in 2007 according to its port agents Stanley Services Ltd.

No horse risk

THE Acting Chief Medical Officer announced in a press release on Monday that horse meat found in food products are not considered to be a public health risk.

Having reviewed the guidance issued by the UK authorities the statement declared that concerns regarding other substances within these food products are also unsubstantiated but reassured that should more information become available, or the list of affected products grows, the public and retailers shall be duly informed.

Musical picnic for bears of all ages

VISITING UK folk singer and well-rounded musician Marc Block enthralled visitors to the Falkland Conservation Teddy Bear Picnic at the Patricia Luxton National Nature Reserve on Sunday.

Top trade and media birdwatchers aiming for Falklands experience

THE Falkland Islands Tourist Board (FITB) will be hosting some of the UK's top birdwatchers at the end of this month, on a trip led by Tim Appleton, co-founder and organiser of the prestigious British Birdwatching Fair.

This will be the first visit of its kind to be hosted by the Tourist Board. The group, including a mix of trade and media will be in the Falklands from the February 23 until March 2, 2013.

Tim will be accompanied by the directors of two of the UK's leading tour operators, including Steve Rooke from Sunbird and Gerald Griffiths from Avian Adventures as well as three journalists including Matthew Merrit, the editor of Birdwatching magazine and freelance journalists Mike Unwin and Dominic Couzens.

While Steve and Gerald will be looking to see if the Falkland Islands would fit within their 2014 brochures, the journalists will be visiting the Islands to write first hand travel/wildlife features based on their experiences.

Tim Appleton

Tim Appleton said: "We are very excited about our forthcoming trip to the Falkland Islands and experiencing the destination first hand. I am particularly looking forward to visiting Bleaker Island as this has always been on my radar as well as seeing the Falkland Islands steamer duck. The group will be taking a lot of pictures and sharing their experiences with their relevant audiences before, during and after the trip."

Managing Director of the Falkland Islands Tourist Board Tony Mason told Penguin News: "We are looking forward to welcoming the group to the Falkland Islands and showcasing the best of the destination and what it has to offer.

"We will be sending them to many different areas, so they have the full experience. I am looking forward to their feedback and most importantly their articles and recommendations to tourists from around the world, to visit the Falkland Islands."

The group will spend one night in Darwin before being divided up into two smaller groups; one consisting of media and the other of Tim and the tour operators, for their outer island excursions.

In addition to Darwin, both groups will also visit: Sea Lion Island, Stanley and Volunteer Point.

The media will go on to visit Carcass Island while the tour operators will visit Bleaker, Weddell and Saunders Island.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

JUST to give an inkling of the interest in the UK in the ill fated visit last week of the Argentine foreign minister, Dick and I were doing our first interview within a few hours of landing at Heathrow. So our week continued and with meetings at the Foreign Office it was full. Between us we must have done interviews with journalists from half a dozen countries and some of the main UK TV, radio and print organisations. Already sleep deprived, and having had a near sleepless night as I feared my alarm clock would not wake me, I had an early start on Wednesday, leaving the FIGO flat at 5.30 to go to the new Broadcasting House near Oxford Street. There I did interviews with Five Live Radio, BBC Breakfast TV and BBC World TV and was back at FIGO by 7.30 am.

It is always difficult to guess how an interview will go but none of our interviewers were aggressive or hostile and I like to think that we came over as calm and measured when compared with Timerman who appeared to be a bit rattled after the first few questions. It was useful therefore, to have the opportunity in a few interviews to speak after they had replayed a bit of his performance.

On balance I think we won the moral high ground and had a tremendous opportunity to make our case to a large audience. The much advertised 'European' support for the Argentines appears to have been a few dual passport holders and Richard Gott (who incidentally, inspired my first foray into print when I had a letter published in the Guardian in about 1977 in response to a fairly unpleasant article he'd written about the Islands). They did not give out a list at their press conference so we may never know who else was there. They also handed out a rather thin and inaccurate history, presumably designed to counter our well researched booklet.

An enjoyable week, if exhausting, another interesting one as we welcome the Commonwealth Parliamentary regional representatives and the conference speakers.

New group Friends of the Falklands launches international support for the National Museum and Archives

THE Falkland Islands are clearly looking to the future with confidence and ambition. But a newly-formed group of heritage enthusiasts based in the UK is doing its best to support the people of the Islands in conserving and promoting knowledge of their history.

The Friends of the Falkland Islands Museum and the Jane Cameron National Archives – "FIMA Friends" for short – was formally established at the end of January. It will work closely with both the Stanley Museum and the Jane Cameron National Archives by building support internationally that will help both institutions to present their collections to the public, and help acquire historical artefacts from around the world that would have a natural home in the Falklands.

The initiative is the brainchild of prominent Falklands philatelist Stefan Heijtz. Noting that the museum was about to move into a new and much more appropriate centre in Stanley's historic dockyard, and that the Archives were becoming an increasingly valuable asset for researchers, Stefan approached like-minded friends, including former Governor David Tatham, to start bringing the initiative to reality.

With the Friends now formally established with a constitution, the Society's Chairman, former Falklands Governor Donald Lamont, said, "I was delighted to be invited by David Tatham and his committee to take over from him the task of leading this exciting initiative. We have the support of the Falklands Museum and National Trust and can now start promoting the Museum and Archives and putting together the funding to enable us to make a real contribution to the work of both institutions."

Within the Falklands, the initiative has been greeted warmly. Museum Manager Leona Roberts said: "The group has the potential to be of enormous importance. A wealth of knowledge and experience exists among our supporters and I believe that FIMA Friends can do much to help us achieve our goal of protecting and promoting the heritage of the Islands."

National Archivist Tansy Bishop pointed out that the day-to-day operating costs of the Archives are covered by the Falkland Islands Government, but FIMA Friends funding will speed up the ability to make items available for viewing. "Due to the budget process we occasionally have delays in purchasing materials for preservation and conservation for unexpected large donations. With additional funding from the Friends we could ensure quicker access to new acquisitions," she said.

The FIMA Friends committee, which was appointed at the first general meeting on 30 January, now faces a number of priority tasks, including promoting the organisation and inviting membership, developing a website and seeking charitable status.

Applications for membership are already being welcomed. Forms detailing the objectives of the society, the benefits of membership and the various categories – which may cost as little as £15 per year – are available from the Membership Secretary, Dr Stephen Palmer, at email palmers@fintry.plus.com

Chairman Donald Lamont, said, "There could hardly be a more important time to emphasise the value of conserving and presenting the rich history of the Falkland Islands. The aim of the Friends will be to support the Museum and National Trust and the Jane Cameron National Archives in their vital work. We invite anyone with an interest in Falklands history – whether in the Islands, the UK or elsewhere in the world – to join us." Graham Bound

Museum gift from Salvesens

IN Stanley until last week when they sailed for South Georgia on the RRS Ernest Shackleton were, members of a family which has been closely linked with the Falklands and South Georgia since 1907 when they opened a whaling station on New Island, followed shortly afterwards by one in South Georgia which thrived until the 1960s.

Accompanied by his sister, Evelyn, Alastair Salvesen presented a hardback history of the Salvesen family, to Trustee Tim Blake of the Falkland Islands Museum and National Trust on February 4, to commemorate the close relationship the Scottish family share with the South Atlantic.

Also donated to the Museum was a print of what is believed to be one of the first photographs of South Georgia to be taken from the air. Taken in 1938, the photograph shows a Royal Navy ship harbouring outside of Grytviken with the dramatic skyline created by South Georgia's mountain ranges. "Shortly after the photograph was taken the aircraft crashed into the sea, but fortunately the crew were within rescue distance of the ship," said Mr Salvesen.

The postage stamp war for the Falkland Islands

Albert-Friedrich Gruene of the Falkland Island Philatelic Study Group offers a fascinating insight into Britain and Argentina's use of the postage stamp over the past 77 years in an illustrated 'battle' for the Falklands

ARGENTINA has issued in recent years quite a number of commemorative stamps, special cancellations and vignettes showing the Falkland Islands as part of the territory of Argentina. This 'tradition' began on January 1, 1936, when the Argentine Postal Authorities issued a one peso map stamp (Fig 1) clearly showing the Falkland Islands as part of Argentine territory.

The British reaction came swift in February 1936 when Anthony Eden, the then Foreign Secretary, stated in the House of Commons: "The British Ambassador at Buenos Aires had been instructed to protest against the inclusion of the Falkland Islands in this map stamp of Argentine Territory, and to inform the Argentine Government that HM Government cannot admit the claim that the Islands are Argentine property."

The origin of the Argentine one peso map stamp issue dates back to the January 2, 1933, when the legendary Centenary stamps of the Falkland Islands were issued (Fig 2) which were refused by the Argentine Republic and led to a kind of 'postal war'.

Maude Carey the then postmaster of the Falkland Islands and the first lady Postmaster of the British Empire wrote to a collector in 1933: "There seems to be much disturbance going on in Argentine and I believe according to the paper 'La Prensa' intend surcharging any of our letters which bear the Centenary stamps. They've got the impertinence to claim the Islands. I've just written to someone there to see what will happen to my envelopes."

Mail franked with stamps from the Centenary issue were charged postal dues as for un-stamped mail and in some cases the stamps were obliterated; much sought after collectors items nowadays!

When the Argentine authorities issued in 1936 their one peso map stamp they were obviously not aware that the British Empire had made a territorial claim on a map stamp already 38 years earlier in December 1898, when Canada issued a commemorative stamp that is known among collectors as the 'Map Stamp', but also as the world's first 'Christmas stamp' (Fig 3). The initiator of the new Canadian stamp for the Imperial Penny Postage rate (1d two Canadian cents). Sir William Mullock, the Postmaster General of Canada, wished for a so called Mercator projection (a cylindrical map projection presented by the Flemish geographer and cartographer Gerardus Mercator in 1569), that showed the earth as if it were flat. So Sir William consulted George R Parkin who had published in 1893 his famous 'The British Empire Map of the World on Mercator's Projection'. Parkin was then the most important protagonist of a united British Empire (at least on his maps).

He attempted to demonstrate the reconstruction of the world by modern technology and tried to create the impression of an organic unity of the British Empire by the professional marking of naval bases, railways, telegraph lines and steamer routes on his maps. Parkin's proposal of 'a miniature reproduction of his map of the British Empire with Canada in the centre' was soon accepted.

Two main varieties of this stamp exist; half of the total printing of 20 million was printed with blue oceans and the other half with green oceans. The countries that belonged to the British Empire were printed in red. At that time Britain held the largest empire on earth and that explains the slogan at the bottom of the stamp, "WE HOLD A VASTER EMPIRE THAN HAS BEEN" (borrowed from an 1887 poem of Sir Lew Morris). Parts of German South West Africa, German East Africa, the Republics of Transvaal and the Orange Free State, Portuguese East Africa and the island of Borneo plus some more countries (or at least parts of them) were also by accident included in the British Empire with the result that the empire became a bit VASTER than in reality.

If you look on the red colour

(darker shading for print as opposed to online readers) in the Falklands vicinity, the map indeed looks already very modern. One could think that the Total Exclusion Zone an area that was declared by the United Kingdom on April 30, 1982 covering a circle of 200 nautical miles (370 km) from the centre of the Falkland Islands was already anticipated 115 years ago!

I think it is clear by now why the stamp is called among collectors the 'Map Stamp'; actually I think it is also the world's first 'Map Stamp' showing for the first time a map of the whole world on a postage stamp. One important question is still open: Why is it also called by many collectors the First Christmas Stamp?

The best explanation I found comes from Michael T Nowlan: Stamp designs for the colonial countries had to be approved by the ruling monarch (in 1898 by Queen Victoria.) When a post office official was presenting the new Canadian stamp for the Imperial Penny Postage rate, he suggested to Her Majesty that the new stamp could serve as a tribute to the prince. The official was referring to the then Prince of Wales (three years later King Edward VII) whose birthday occurred on November 9, the date originally selected for the release of the issue.

Queen Victoria is said to have replied, "Which prince?" in a tone that made clear she would not be pleased with a royal connection other than herself. The official replied swiftly "the Prince of Peace" referring to the Christ child. As a result, the stamp when it was officially released on December 7, 1898, bore also the words 'XMAS 1898'. Apart from the discussed interesting peculiarities of the issue, one thing is clear; it is not only the first Map Stamp, the first Christmas Stamp, but it is also the first postage stamp that claims the Falkland Islands for the British Empire.

IJS/CE Head Teacher Tom Hill said of the camp at Swan Inlet which began on Tuesday Febru-

"At the same time, Mrs Short also taught the 'rivers' unit of the geography curriculum and the children studied and measured ox bow lakes, meanders and river cliffs."

An odd approach says FIFCA

THE following is in response to the article entitled SAAS 'better positioned than ever', which was reported in the Penguin News on 1 February 2013.

We find some of the comments about the fishing industry surprising and somewhat disappointing.

It is implied that decisions in relation to the fishing industry are not taken in the islands. The fact is that the quota is owned by Falkland Island companies with a significant history of contributing extensively to the Falkland Islands economy. These companies, for the most part, carry out their fishing activities through joint ventures with foreign fishing companies. This is a structure which continues to serve the Falkland Islands well and has many benefits. As a joint venture you might expect that decisions are taken jointly when it comes to the fishing operation, including the transport of product, and indeed that is exactly what happens.

It is also stated that: "The Falkland Islands sees only a tiny portion of what could be earned here," in relation to the added value activities involved with the transportation of product. This should not be overplayed and there are benefits in having the distribution point close to market. The key point however is that the Falkland Islands have done extremely well from fishing and it has been the mainstay of the economy for the last 27 years. The revenues generated have helped the Falkland Islands develop into the successful, prosperous and self funding state that exists today.

FIG figures show that fishing contributions to the Falkland Islands economy have averaged £61 million per year since 1998 and make up 61% of the Islands GDP. The contribution was £94 million for 2010, which is the most recent year on record.

Private sector operations generally seek to maximise profitability through the most efficient use of assets and services available to them. This also benefits the Government and the wider Falkland Islands community as tax revenues are also then maximised. Companies therefore need to be free to make decisions on good commercial grounds.

There have also been some difficulties. It is generally recognised that the Falkland Islands infrastructure could not cope with the containerisation and transportation of all the product in the fishery. Reliability issues with the SAAS service mean increased risk and uncertainty, something which industry generally seeks to minimise.

We respectfully suggest that if you want to successfully attract business, the way to do so is through continued discussion with prospective customers. It is an odd approach to make negative comments through the media which are likely to antagonise and alienate the very industry you are trying to attract.

Chair, FIFCA

I AM the brother of Corporal Stewart McLaughlin of 3rd Battalion the Parachute Regiment. Penguin News helped in publicising my need for accommodation for my visit last December. Jenny Macaskill was very kind enough to host my stay, which I will forever be thankful for to you both.

Currently members of 3 Para B Coy 1982 are visiting and staying at Liberty Lodge. One member, Grant Grimham was severely injured by the same ordnance that also injured my late brother, who was killed by a second explosion shortly after.

Stewart was cited for a Victoria Cross for his supreme devotion to duty, and astonishing leadership and bravery under enemy fire by his OC Major Mike Argue (Dec). Sadly Stewart's citation appears to have been lost in transit from Falkland Islands to London and he therefore received no award. For the last 30 years a campaign has been fought to have him formally recognised. This has included his late parents Edmund, Eddy, and Elizabeth 'Betty' McLaughlin. Most recently (December and January) we have confirmations from both Major Gen (Rtd) Julian Thompson and Lt Gen Hew Pike (Rtd), that the citations were indeed written and reached as far as Divisional Command Falklands Land Forces 1982. Sir John Nott a former Minister of Defence, has said that any citation lost may be treated as a new citation and he will support the campaign in any way he can.

The injustice I am sure, will be felt by all of the Islanders, when they become aware of the story. At present we are awaiting replies from the Parachute Regimental Colonel, to see if the Regiment will support our campaign and Sir John Holmes, who has just carried out a Medals Review, recommending more openness to awards and a willingness to look into proven injustices in the awarding of medals, regardless of time limits.

Lastly I thank all of the Islanders for the wonderful hospitality shown to me and my family, particularly the uniquely wonderful Jenny Macaskill, and I would ask, but sure I do not have to, that you remember all those that fought in 1982 when you vote in your referendum.

Much support

I REFER to the article in the PN on 25 January 2013.

I was not aware that little attention is paid in the UK to the Falklands dispute and that people's sympathy and patience is wearing thin. Although there are some who may doubt the wisdom of supporting the Falklands I am sure there are many more who do particularly when they know the facts.

One of the UK's responsibilities to its overseas territories is defence and foreign affairs. It should therefore come as no surprise that the cost per Islander is going to be disproportionate compared to the cost per head of a UK citizen as it would be in any other overseas territory. However a better way to consider this might be to look at the cost to the UK tax payer. The UK has a population of circa 70 million.

If the defence cost is in the region of £61m per annum this equates to less than £1 per annum per head. This pales into insignificance when compared to the £50m that the UK gives to the EU every day and we know for sure that the British people are very sceptical about the EU.

It is also worth remembering the following: The military deployed to the Falklands receive valuable training

FIG has offered to meet some of the cost of defence should oil revenues materialise

Had Argentina not invaded the islands in 1982 the military expense would not have been necessary.

Please vote

PHIL and I would like to encourage all eligible members of the electorate to take part in the Referendum in March. Regrettably, we will be unable to join you in showing our allegiance to the Islands and their people, and sovereignty, obviously, but feel sure that the majority who take part will elicit our thoughts.

Our experience, in the UK, has been that only 40 - 60% take part, but with a small population, and with the current pressure from our neighbours, when it comes to the international stage, it is much more important that the right message goes out. Whilst it is likely that the majority vote is going to be an emphatic "Yes" to British sovereignty, it is also important that the percentage of voter turnout is high.

Saying "Yes" is only part of the equation at the end of the day.

You can all hear what our neighbours will have to say once the final vote is counted; that much is inevitable; after all, they see all of us, whatever our roots, be they British, Falkland Islands, St Helena, or wherever, as a population planted here by the British Government to protect their interests, when all of us are here by choice.

It will make no difference to Argentina. They will continue to shout and whinge anyway, but to the international community it will make a point.

Please, all of you that can, vote.

Port Louis looking peaceful around 1834

John Fowler

ACCORDING to the Argentine view of things, the Falkland Islands are Las Islas Malvinas and the capital city is not Stanley, which was founded in 1844, but Ushuaia in Tierra del Fuego, which did not really begin to be a town till 1881 with the establishment of a penal colony there. The place does have links with the Falkland Islands however as the first European family to settle there among the native Indians, were the Bridges. These British missionaries, who had previously run the South American Mission on Keppel Island, in the Falklands, built the first house in Ushuaia in 1870.

Continuing with what we would consider to be the fictitious Argentine view, which almost amounts to a belief in a parallel universe, our regional newspaper is not the Penguin News, but El Diario del Fin del Mundo, (The End of the World's Newspaper) published in Ushuaia in Tierra del Fuego, Argentina. This is an excellent daily paper, which comes out from Monday to Friday and has recently, during our troubles with cruise ships, often proved a useful source of information.

Many local newspapers, including the Penguin News on occasion, make good a lack of current newsworthy events by trawling their archives, usually under a heading such as "On This Day." El Diario del Fin del Mundo is no exception and on February 8, this year they took a look back to the same date in 1833.

Under the headline, "Esto pasó en nuestra región: Fusila a los siete asesinos del comandante de islas Malvinas" (This happened in our region: they shot the seven killers of the Commander of the Falkland Islands) the readers of the paper are reminded of the event which forms a crucial part of the historical basis for the Argentine Government's sovereignty claim over the Falkland Islands.

The odd thing about this report, by an Argentine newspaper, in Argentina, aimed at Argentine readership, is that the account that they give of the event does not appear to be entirely the officially sanctioned one, which tells of a civilian population cruelly expelled from their homes by the might of the imperialistic British.

In the report, we are told about the mutiny and murder by shooting and bayoneting on November 30 1832, of José Francisco Mestivier, the artillery sergeant major in charge of a garrison of 50 soldiers which had arrived in the Islands in early October. We also are told that the members of this garrison had arrived with their wives because the intention was that they should settle in the Islands. We are told as well that this group was "made up of deportees, criminals, and vagabonds who had been condemned to serve in the military; this being the first rehearsal for forming a southern penal colony." (integrada por deportados, criminales y vagabundos condenados a servir como uniformados; siendo este el primer ensayo de colonia penal austral)

The article informs us that while José María Pinedo, the captain of an Argentine ship, was trying to capture the seven mutineers who had murdered their commander, the British corvette HMS Clio arrived under Captain Onslow. It is here that the version of events, as described by the newspaper of the region to which the Falkland Islands supposedly belongs, departs from that repeated so fervently by Argentina's President and her ministers. True, we are told that Captain Onslow announces that he has orders to take possession of the Islands in the name of the British Crown, (reasonable, given that we have claimed sovereignty over the Islands since the 18th Century) and gives him 24 hours in which to take down the Argentine flag. When Pinedo protests at this, we are told that far from exercising brutal force, the British captain tells him that "he would have the honour of conveying his

The myth-exploding bit comes at the end of the article, as follows:

"On the fourth of January, the Argentine ship left carrying the news of the dispossession. Among its passengers were the murderers of Mestivier, to be judged for mutiny and the crime against their superior officer, which ended with the seven soldiers facing a firing squad. Pinedo also was court-martialled and was removed from the ranks of the Navy because of his passivity in the face of the British invasion.

"The Clio also left later on. Then the Islands remained inhabited by a few British officials and the employees of Vernet's establishment."*

It is these "civilian employees of Vernet" – a controversial figure, who some claim to be the first Argentine Governor of the Falklands, but who also sought the permission of the British to establish a settlement in Port Louis – who, according to the 'official' Argentine history, make up the population of which the Falkland Islands were supposedly driven out in 1833. (Unfortunately, some of them were shortly to be murdered at Port Louis by gauchos led by the Argentine folk hero Rivero, who disliked being paid with Vernet's own paper money, when they preferred being paid by the Royal Navy in gold)

According to research in the National Archives of Argentina and elsewhere by historians Peter Pepper and Graham Pascoe, of the 33 civilian residents of Port Louis when HMS Clio arrived, 22 remained when it left. Twelve were from Argentina (8 gauchos, 3 women and 1 child), four were Charrúa Indians from Uruguay, two were British, two German, one French and one from Jamaica.

Although the account of the events of February 8, 1833 given by the Diario del Fin del Mundo is so different from that of the official Argentine propaganda, it matches that given by Pepper and Pascoe in their 2008 publication, "Getting it Right: the Real History of the Falkland Islands." Pepper and Pascoe record that Onslow had orders not to molest any civilian inhabitants he might find, orders which he obeyed scrupulously, even going to great lengths to persuade the inhabitants of Port Louis to remain, as their presence as suppliers of fresh meat to visiting ships was of great importance. Even Captain Pinedo in his report made on his return to Buenos Aires, said that Onslow had told him that: "... those inhabitants who freely wished it should remain and both they and their property would be respected as before..."

I don't personally believe that the events of 1833 are particularly significant in the sovereignty debate, when compared to the rights implicit in the 180 or so years of peaceful and voluntary settlement that followed (not counting the 74 days following the Argentine invasion in 1982), but if over half the population who remained in Port Louis after the alleged ethnic cleansing in 1833 were Argentines and the newspaper of the nearest Argentine province to the Falkland Islands believes this to be true, why is it so difficult for Argentina's President and her Foreign Secretary to grasp?

Reclaiming ancestral home of seabirds in South Georgia Phase Two of world's biggest rat eradication campaign gets under way

THE first phase of the campaign to eradicate rats from the Island of South Georgia, which began two years ago, appears to have gone remarkably well. Project Director Dr Martin said that while it is "extremely difficult to prove a negative" and guarantee that every rat had been taken out of the fifty or so square miles treated in South Georgia, everything was looking very good. There had been no indication of any rat finds during that period of time despite diligent searches. The best evidence of success, according to Dr Martin, was the presence of large South Georgia Pintail ducklings, which hadn't been seen in that area in living memory. "The work itself went flawlessly; we had good pilots, great aircraft and good weather."

The methods employed for the eradication of the South Georgia rats are very simple, in theory at least. Cereal pellets of what Dr Martin describes as "a second generation rat poison" are spread by helicopter. This method allows a very thin, but also very even distribution of pellets, everywhere that rats might get, including steep cliffs where humans could not tread. The idea is to put a single bait pellet within range of every single rodent targeted and that will be enough to kill them. The bait is spread from stainless steel hoppers slung underneath the helicopter in much the same way that fertilizer is spread from behind a tractor with a little spinner that pushes the bait out. Dr Martin talks of "painting" a thin layer of bait pellets over South Georgia with an 80m wide brush.

Encouraged by the success of the first campaign phase, the South Georgia Heritage Trust (SGHT) has now committed £3.5 million to the second season of work. With a 25 strong team, 3 helicopters, 700 drums of fuel, nearly 8 tonnes of food and three shipping containers to move to an island with no airport, the SGHT has chartered the British Antarctic Survey's RRS Ernest Shackleton to get them from the Falklands to South Georgia. Bait spreading will start on March 1 and it is hoped to have this second phase completed by June.

The area which it is planned to cover this year will be five times that covered two years ago, which was already the world's biggest ever rodent eradication campaign. If all goes well, by June the team expect to have covered about 65 to 70 per cent of the areas of the island where rats were, leaving a relatively small area still to cover in the final year of the project and a cushion of opportunity to make up for any short-fall this year due to bad weather, equipment failure or any other eventualities.

Understandably, the Project Director would like to avoid the need for a further, fourth season. He told Penguin News, "If we were pushed into a further season of operation, it is one and a half million pounds before we drop the first pellet, and we just don't have that money."

Asked what the underlying purpose of this expensive rat eradication project was, Dr Martin replied, "In effect we are playing God here," but the reason for spending such a huge amount of money is that as a consequence of rats being brought to South Georgia, first by sealers two centuries ago and later by the whaling industry, some 100,000,000 seabirds were displaced.

Dr Martin says that it is ironic that while the seal and whale populations which were the intentional target of these activities are recovering, the unintentional damage done to the fauna of South Georgia by the accidental introduction of rodents, carries on to this day. The idea is that by eradicating the rats, the seabirds of South Georgia will be allowed to reclaim their ancestral home.

With the RRS Shackleton when it departed from Mare Harbour on February 7 was former GSGSSI Commissioner Howard Pearce.

Community School Sports Day

No lack of effort here

SPORTS Day at FICS proved to be a closely matched contest with the leaders changing throughout the day. All the sports had two people from each house and provided lots of opportunity for everyone to take part in a variety of activities, from the traditional events such as Javelin to more modern events like the Football Penalty Shoot which was a very popular event.

There was a great atmosphere all day with the pupils and staff getting behind their houses. Heading into the Relay Races Ross house were leading, but with the Relays counting for double points it was all to play for. All the races were close but the other houses were racking up the points and Fitzroy pulled through with the most first places and took the win from Ross house.

Well done to everyone who took part and thank you to all the staff who helped out.

Class 2 join the crew of kindly Clyde

FOUNDATION Stage 2 class (Mrs Stanworth's class) took advantage of an unexpected offer from the Royal Navy to tour the HMS Clyde last week. Head Teacher Tom Hill told Penguin News.

He said, "It took a bit of arranging at short notice, but the Navy are famous for their organisational skills and with Mrs Andrea Clausen of Falkland Islands Tourism and Travel kindly providing the transport, the children were whisked aboard in no time."

Everyone had a wonderful and very informative time and the children all came away with the surprise gift of a giant glow stick.

Half marathon this Sunday...

13.1 miles. Sunday February 17, 2013

You can sign-up on the day!

Adult walkers or runners - £7

Children under 16 years can take part as a relay team - £3.50 per child

ALL walkers for the Stanley Running Club Cape Pembroke Half Marathon are to meet at the race start at 9.15am to set-off before the runners. The start of the 13.1 mile race is at the lay-by on Stanley Airport Road approximately 100 metres West of the FIPASS road turn-off junction.

Those running the annual event need to check-in at the Stanley Leisure Centre, 9.45am to 10.30am, on Sunday. You must register to get your number.

Runners will then be taken by bus to the start point (or may wish to drive themselves to the start point) for the race to begin promptly at 11am.

The course follows the tarmac road and turns right just before the Stanley Airport hangar and continues on the gravel road that curves around the east end of Stanley Airport. Thereafter the course follows the winding cross country vehicle track down the North side of Cape Pembroke Peninsula, goes around the Lighthouse, and continues up the vehicle track on the South side of the Peninsula.

miles. This section is marked in both directions with coloured tape markers.

After the intervening gravel track, the course rejoins the Stanley Airport Road, turns right down towards FIPASS, then left in front of the Seamans Mission, and continues along the seafront until the finish point on Victory Green.

Drinks stations will be positioned at the Airport Hangar turn-off; Cape Pembroke Lighthouse; Airport Hangar turn-off and the Seamans Mission.

Prize giving will take place in the Leisure Centre at 2pm.

...or quarter of a marathon next week

THERE is also a 10k SRC race planned for February 24. It starts and finishes on Victory Green.

9.45am check-in for a 10am start - entry fee £5 - minimum age 12 - entries on the day or in advance to ros.sparky@horizon.co.uk for the challenge.

Shooting got underway with nine members and two juniors taking part with some good scoring arrows all around. It was a very close competition with closely matched scores.

This is the second competition that the Falklands Archery Association have had against Non-Such and the score is 2-0 to Non-Such so far. The Archery Club thanks Andy for his photography skills and for being scorer and RC.

Bowles, Bowles and Ross battle for the Stanley Open

TWENTY four golfers took to the field on Saturday to contest the Consultancy Services sponsored Stanley Open. A strong south westerly wind challenged the players for two thirds of their rounds but the wind dropped and players completed their rounds in a gentle breeze and warm sunshine.

A cluster of good scores in the 70's saw 12 players separated by only 6 shots at the end of Day 1.

It is doubtful that Stanley Golf Course has ever looked better presented in the brilliant sunshine that greeted the players on Sunday morning. Stunning greens and welcoming fairways ominously bordered by two foot tall rough.

The lead group of three golfers held no surprises; made up of Sarah Bowles who carded a solid round of 75 joining her husband Troyd on a score of 74 and the overnight leader and defending champion Glenn Ross on 73.

The expectation of good scoring did not exactly materialise; well struck shots ended up long or short and the front nine turned into a scrambling contest.

Troyd and Sarah held their scores together reasonably well but Glenn recorded a pretty wretched 40 for the outward nine. Sarah then took the corner to task, her birdie putt lipped out on the 10th, a solid par on the testing 11th, then a great birdie on the notorious 12th and saw her birdie putt drift away at the last on the short par four 13th.

Troyd edged one in front of Sarah with a birdie on the 13th and would head up the 15th with the lead by one from Sarah and three clear of Glenn.

Meanwhile in the group up ahead; Ian Stewart was reeling the leaders in and had caught them at one point, with a weekend best round of 71 and posted the clubhouse leading aggregate score of 149.

The next group to finish failed to match it, so excitement was mounting for the waiting players as the lead group headed west.

Glenn holed a 20 foot birdie putt on the 15th to close the gap to one shot off the lead, as Troyd and Sarah both carded bogeys. A good shot into the 16th saw Glenn record another birdie and a two shot swing and take the lead.

Sarah and Glenn both scored a par on the 17th. Troyd responded to losing the lead like a true champion and rolled a 20 foot putt in for birdie.

With Bowles and Ross tied for the lead and the 18th hole playing fairly benign, odds on a play-off were good. Troyd struck his drive well but the ball scurried into the long grass just off the fairway to the right. Glenn fared no better just catching the left hand rough, both would walk up to their golf balls and find horrendous lies.

Sarah struck a solid drive down the fairway and then faced a truly daunting shot, 180 yards over Felton Stream and into the prime lay up area; she took 3 wood and struck the ball beautifully to position A+. Troyd could only play out sideways; making par now from there would require some expert scrambling. Glenn attempted to hit the ball 80 to 100 yards forward from the rough into mid-iron range, the ball had to be struck hard and it flew out low and with surprising top spin and bounded its way 160 yards into the stream.

Troyd hit a fine 4 wood shot to the edge of the green. Glenn took a penalty drop and played a wedge to 25 feet. Sarah's approach flew nicely but landed soft with no release. Troyd putted down to 5 feet and an almost certain par. Glenn struck his putt well but it dived left at the end and the stage was set for Troyd.

If you could choose a putt to win an Open, it might well be this one, uphill and breaking gently left, aiming at the right edge and letting it leak back. Troyd stroked the ball into the centre of the cup for a hard fought par for and a round of 73 and a one shot win over Glenn.

Troyd Bowles now has six Stanley Open titles to his name. Sarah Bowles played stellar golf all weekend to tie third place in the Open with scores of 75 and 74. Darren Wade eagled the 15th on his way to winning the nett event. Carole Lee was second in the nett event and Ian Stewart finished third in both the Open and Nett events.

Another great weekend of golf and the club and its members thank Alison Baker and all at Consultancy Services Ltd for their generous support of our sport. Next Sunday it is the Ian Stewart Trophy, the format for this popular competition is Stableford. The course record is currently 67, expect it to be challenged.

Shooting across the Atlantic

LAST Sunday the archery club shot outdoors for their Frostbite Competition against Non-Such Bowmen from Surrey in the UK.

A 'Frostbite' is an outdoor winter shoot using 36 arrows over 30 metres. Of course whilst it was winter for the Non-Such archers who did their shoot in wet, windy and very cold conditions in the UK, the weather was bright sunshine in the Falklands with a bit of a breeze.

The Falkland archers do not have much experience or practice at outdoor shooting but were up

A PORTRAIT IN SOUND & VISION OF THE Falkland Islands Wildlife & Environment

In this DVD presentation the Falklands environment and its spectacular wildlife is presented both in vision and sound. One hundred and sixty photographs portray the Island's wildlife and landscapes, which are brought to life with a background of natural sounds. The recordings of thirty two species of birds, mammals and atmosphere make this thirty minute production unique. In addition to those species presented with their calls, many other species of fauna and flora are shown, making this both a definitive and high quality work.

Reduce fish discard to zero with national plan

THE Falkland Islands should be examining ways of reducing the amount of fish caught and discarded by vessels fishing in Falklands' waters it was stated by a Member of Legislative Assembly at yesterday's meeting of the Assembly.

MLA Barry Elsby declared there should be a national plan with the ultimate aim of achieving zero discharge of dead fish.

Responding to his question which asked whether vessels were allowed to throw away any fish they catch not covered by their licence, and if so, was it possible to estimate the amount of dead fish thrown away each year, MLA Gavin Short said the vessels could discard or throw away fish, however, they were not compelled to do so, "as is the case in some other fisheries."

He said discarding was a wasteful practice and: "In the Falkland Islands vessels may retain all catch and it is mandatory that they report catch retained and catch discarded. There are by-catch limits for species not covered by the license but excess catches may be retained. Persistent excess catches will result in enforcement action."

Discarded fish counts against the total allowable catch.

MLA Short said the quantity of discards had been reducing although the figures were, "probably something of an underestimate."

Discards arise for a variety of reasons. Some fish species are not commercial. About 90 per cent of discards consist of rock-cod; some of this is due to vessels not being well equipped to process the species, much of it is about the fish being too small to process.

The Fisheries Department has conducted a series of research cruises looking at different mesh sizes. The intention is to determine what increase in mesh size will allow small fish to escape but to retain the commercial catch.

ASH Stoby from Hillside Camp triumphed in the Stanley Running Club Half Marathon last Sunday with Rebecca Frostick the first placed woman. 61 runners took part in the well organised competition.

An SRC spokesperson said they were very grateful to sponsors of the event comprising RBC Ltd, FIC Ltd, Consolidated Fisheries Ltd, Ian Stewart Construction Ltd and Patrick Watts. Report and photographs on centre pages and full timings on the sports page (15).

Oil share owning MLA resigns Minerals portfolio

MEMBER of Legislative Assembly Barry Elsby has relinquished the Mineral Resources portfolio following concern expressed by a member of the public that he owned shares in an oil company.

Speaking to the Motion for Adjournment at yesterday's meeting of Legislative Assembly, MLA Elsby said that in December 2011 he was asked to take responsibility for the Minerals portfolio and like many people in the Islands he and his wife had bought some shares in Rockhopper. They increased greatly in value after the oil discovery and he was concerned that he could not hold shares and take on the portfolio responsibility.

He said following a meeting on the subject with the Attorney General and the Speaker of the House he sold all the shares he held totalling over £25,000.

He added that the shares the member of the public referred to and the reason he was now standing down from that portfolio were shares that he and his wife purchased as a present for their two children. The value of each share was now approximately £143 he said, adding that the difficulty was that he allowed them to remain in his name, "and that was a mistake."

After the meeting with the Attorney General and the Speaker he took the decision that the shares bought for the children were of such low value that no one would consider it likely that they would influence his decision in relation to his duties in the minerals department, "whilst starting the long process of opening an account for them with my son with a UK shareholder so I could transfer the shares to them."

In the meantime he declared ownership of the shares in the public disclosure, "that all members have to make."

MLA Elsby emphasised: "I was not trying to hide these shares. The declaration of interest is gazetted, available at Gilbert House and in the library I believe. It was some months before we were notified that my son's account was working."

At this point MLA Elsby said he should have transferred the shares, "but with the pressure of hospital and council work I simply forgot. Without realising the significance I again made a public declaration of ownership of the same number of shares in January of this year. However, I do not believe I have behaved dishonestly."

Penguin News

Comment by Editor Lisa Watson

DIPLOMACY can be a tricky old thing and while I do my utmost to practice it as much as possible, particularly during chats with foreign press, I don't think I have ever had to scramble for words so strenuously as on Tuesday while being interviewed by a Chinese film crew.

Having asked the usual questions about the importance of the referendum to the Islanders, they then enquired whether the Falklands situation might be compared to that between Japan and China over a group of islands, and did I feel those countries could learn from the Falklands situation? My mind reeled; firstly at the concept that two superpowers might learn lessons from our little community and secondly because I had only the vaguest idea of the conflict to which they referred.

Happily, having recently interviewed a parliamentarian who had described the enormous value of delegation visits to other countries for reasons of 'sharing of experiences and information', I was able to parrot something relatively similar, if a little shakily. Although come to think of it had I been more than feebly informed of the conflict over the Senkaku Islands in the South China Sea I might still have been reluctant to voice any further opinion, having spent so many years resenting the treatment of the Falklands situation as little more than some distant academic problem, open to the opinion of any self important sod who fancied venturing one.

For those not in the know (and I am sure most of you are far more in the know than I was) it is the presence of oil in the South China Sea that prompts China's claim to the islands, and presumably this is the common factor, other than the political conflict itself, that has generated interest from both China and Japan in the South Atlantic situation (further Asian film crews will visit next month).

The reason for their interest in the referendum, however, was less clear as those islands are in fact uninhabited. Although ironically this again offers a comparison bearing in mind that we are generally considered by Argentina not to 'exist'. Leaving that aside, it was reassuring that the visiting journalists appeared to view the referendum as part of a viable process forward, a process that might potentially offer clarity to other countries that deal with comparable situations. And despite the Argentine government protestations that the really quite hefty gang of press visiting next month will be broadcasting nothing more than an illegal stunt, it appears that not everyone agrees.

STILL on the subject of the referendum, as a result of worries expressed that the precise meaning of the 'yes' and the 'no' votes and the possible consequences of each, are not fully understood by everybody, Penguin News will be fully and hopefully, simply and clearly, chewing the subject over in next week's issue.

MLAs in agreement

THE speeches in support of the Motion for Adjournment at the end of each meeting of the Legislative Assembly, which normally offer members the opportunity to air the various bees in their bonnets, were remarkable this week for their unanimity.

All the members took the opportunity to heap praises on everyone connected with the recent successful CPA Regional Conference and in particular organisers, Claudette Prior and Cherie Clifford.

Members were equally eager to thank the retiring Commander of British Forces South Atlantic, Brigadier Bill Aldridge and his wife Jill, who were not present, being currently en route to South Georgia. Such public thanks to the man in charge of the protection of the Islands may often in the past have been simply a case of politeness, but on this occasion they revealed real warmth for a popular CBSAL, who has made it his business to get out and meet people during his tour of duty.

The third topic to which all members gave more than a passing reference was the forthcoming referendum on the political status of the Islands.

All the MLAs stressed the absolute need for there to be a big turn out on the polling days, with MLAs Mike Summers and Gavin Short taking some pains to describe the disastrous consequences of anything other than a resounding 'yes' vote.

Aside from this unanimity and the announcement by MLA Dr Barry Elsby, which is dealt with on Page 1, perhaps the most controversial moment before the house adjourned was provided by MLA Gavin Short, who suggested that the Treasury should look into the financial consequences of placing Falkland Islands pensions outside the tax regime.

FLH wool sales slower

BY comparison with previous years, wool sales at Falklands Landholdings (FLH) have been slow this year with 666 bales sold to date. General Manger Owen Summers confirmed at Wednesday's meeting of the FLH Board.

He said there had not been a lot of movement in the wool market since Christmas with gains made one week tending to be cancelled out the following week by inconsistent prices. Market prices for coarser wools remain very similar to last year whereas prices for the finer wools (25 micron and below) are tending to be 10 per cent to 14 per cent lower than last year.

With the opening of the abattoir export season, FLH has supplied just over 4000 sheep and lamb to date.

Mr Summers said following a world wide trend in meat prices the Falkland Islands Meat Company has had to lower its meat prices by approximately twelve per cent. At the same time the body weights of animals supplied to date are between 0.5 and 1 kg heavier than last year which, he said, is at the present time, "more than off-setting the decrease in prices. However, it is rather too early in the season to be certain if this trend will continue, but with the quantity of crops and good grass growth in most areas, there is no reason to expect this not to continue."

Plea from former Ormond Street nurse

A FORMER nurse at Great Ormond Street Hospital, who remembers Falklands children being treated there between 1953 and 1954, will visit the Islands in December on cruise ship Hurtigruten and would very much like to meet up with those individuals.

Audrey recalls the children were investigated for juvenile rheumatoid arthritis and were between four and eight years old at the time.

If you were one of those children and would like to make contact with Audrey please call Pam and Dave Lewis on 21844.

Bail with strict conditions

BAIL, with a number of strict conditions was granted on Friday to Stanley man, Mr James Lang, who had been in police custody since the previous Wednesday, after being charged with possession of an offensive weapon in a public place.

The court was told that due to stress relating to a relationship between his wife's niece and a man, whom Mr and Mrs Lang considered unsuitable, Mr Lang, who had been prescribed anti-depressant drugs, had spent the whole of Wednesday drinking.

Later, around 5.30pm, Mr Lang had appeared in Deano's Bar, banging on the bar with the handle of a ten inch kitchen knife and demanding to know the whereabouts of his wife's niece's boyfriend, who he was threatening to kill.

On leaving Deano's shortly afterwards, Mr Lang appeared in the West Store's Electrical Department uttering the same threats, before falling over. At this time he dropped the knife which was picked up by a member of the public and placed behind the shop counter for safety.

In appealing for bail for his client, Defence Counsel Mr Keith Watson said that the incident was completely out of character for his client. Apart from a couple of sips of champagne he had taken at his wedding ten years ago, Mr Lang had not touched alcohol for fourteen years.

Summing up, Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley said that it was clear that Mr Lang was a man of good character and that there were no substantial grounds for believing that he would re-offend or worse if bail was granted. However, he imposed a total of eight conditions on Mr Lang's bail, including a curfew, a daily report to the police and the requirement not to enter public houses or to attempt to buy alcohol.

16 year old accused

A 16 year-old Stanley youth, accused of driving his motor bike at 50mph in Ross Road West, pleaded not guilty in the Magistrates Criminal Court on Friday February 15. His trial is listed for 10am on March 13.

Driving using mobile phone

GEORGE Benjamin Toolan of Stanley was fined £150 on Wednesday and made to pay £85 prosecution costs after pleading guilty by post to a charge of driving while using a mobile phone. His licence was also endorsed.

Port Howard School says Kung Hai Fat Choy

THE festival of Chinese New Year has been the subject of study by the children at Port Howard School. Teacher Mrs Nightingale said, "They shared the story of how the years got their names; this year is the year of the snake. They found China on the map and globe, looked at information books and tried some Chinese food. They even managed to eat their noodles using chopsticks."

The children enjoyed dancing with ribbons and working together to create a dragon dance. The dragon brought good luck to the shearing shed and the children wished everyone 'Happy New Year' in Chinese, 'Kung Hai Fat Choy'.

Rogers: Actual bodily harm case

PRESSURE on police resources was offered by prosecution counsel, Alison Inglis, on Friday as a possible reason for delays in bringing to a conclusion a case against MPA man, Daniel Peter Rogers, arising from an incident in November 2011.

Mr Rogers, who is a sergeant in HM Forces, was charged with causing actual bodily harm to Sarah Ann Fleming, Thomas Charles Clark and Emma Jane Brook on November 17 and with resisting arrest.

Although a previous appearance in court had led to an adjournment to give police time to investigate matters which might have a bearing on the case, disclosure on these matters was still not complete, the Ms Inglis said.

In the interests of bringing the case forward, Counsel for the defence, Mr Mark Neves, said that his client was prepared to plead guilty to all charges, but in view of what he described as, "major factual disputes," asked for a Newton hearing, which would allow evidence to be presented which might impact on the final verdict.

After Sgt Rogers had pleaded guilty, the case was listed to appear in court again at 9am on Tuesday February 19.

Referring to what he described as, "a drip feed approach to evidence provision," the Senior Magistrate asked Ms Inglis to provide a full explanation of why it had taken four months to bring the case to judgement.

Unfortunately for Sgt Rogers, who is at the end of his tour of duty in the Falklands and keen to return to the UK, there was a further delay when his case came before the court again on Tuesday for a Newton Hearing and sentencing. After two witnesses for the Crown: PC Thomas Clark and WPC Sarah Fleming had been heard in the morning and cross-examined by both counsels, in the afternoon proceedings were halted when Sgt Rogers's counsel, Mr Neves became unwell and unable to continue with his examination of a third witness for the Crown, RPC Emma Brook.

The hearing is now due to resume at 9am this morning, Friday February 22.

Knife crime

CONDITIONAL bail was granted on Wednesday morning to Mr Cameron Goodwin of North Arm, who appeared before the Senior Magistrate and assessors Anton Livermore and Phyl Rendell charged with racial harassment causing alarm and distress and the possession of a knife in a public place with the intention of using it to do harm.

Mr Goodwin, who declined to be represented, pleaded not guilty to the first charge and guilty to the second, though he disputed the identity of the knife detailed by the prosecution.

Because of the two areas of doubt surrounding the case, the Senior Magistrate ordered that a trial on the first charge of racial harassment should be held on March 14, together with a hearing to establish the facts relating to the offence to which Mr Goodwin had pleaded guilty. Explaining that custody was among the range of sentencing for this offence, the Senior Magistrate strongly urged Mr Goodwin to seek legal representation.

Discontinued

IN court on Tuesday, Senior Crown Counsel, Alison Inglis, asked for proceedings against Mr Rodrigo Ramos Rubilar to be discontinued on the grounds that it was not possible to contact two of the key witnesses in the case.

Mr Rubilar had first appeared in court on February 6, when he pleaded not guilty to two charges of assaulting a fellow worker at the Mount Pleasant Complex on two occasions in November.

Senior Magistrate, Mr Carl Gumsley, questioned the legality of such an action, which he felt might constitute an infringement of the complainant's rights. After some lengthy consultation of legal references, he was persuaded by the Senior Crown Counsel that the Constitution allowed the Attorney General to discontinue a prosecution and ruled accordingly.

Motoring offence

A MOTORING offence listed to appear before the Magistrates Court on Wednesday morning should not have been presented, said Senior Crown Counsel, Alison Inglis, who was asking for it to be discontinued under the powers granted to the Attorney General under the Constitution.

Ms Inglis explained that in summoning Mr Terence Browning to appear on charges of driving a vehicle without licence or insurance, she had been unaware of a six-month statutory period applicable to motoring offences. The offence with which Mr Browning was charged had occurred nearly a year ago and had only recently come to light in the course of police investigations into vehicles which had been abandoned on Stanley Common.

Legislative Assembly Diary

MLA Jan Cheek shares a glimpse into the work of a member of the Legislative Assembly

WHEN we agreed over a year ago to take our turn to host the CPA Regional conference this month we could not have known how timely it would be in terms of the proximity to the Referendum and the heightened rhetoric from our neighbours. We enjoyed three very different, but equally interesting presentations by the lead speakers and can now use relevant information to further our own arguments when challenged on our right to decide our future. Not only was the Conference a great success in practical and organisation terms, but the topics around the theme of self determination proved of great interest to all participants. As with all these events the informal exchange of ideas and sharing of successful solutions to common problems were as important and useful as the formal debates and workshops.

The conference delegates were unanimous in their praise for the way in which they were welcomed and well looked after everywhere they went. Many expressed the intention of returning for a holiday in the future. Most MLAs have been to at least one CPA conference and we can say in all honesty that none has run more smoothly than ours and some were chaotic in comparison. Justifiable praise was given to all who were responsible, in particular Claudette Prior and Cherie Clifford who worked for months to ensure the success of the event.

I was a little surprised that someone apparently thought that members should not campaign for the referendum. How odd would it be if someone could come in from outside and campaign, but the representatives of the people of the Islands could not? I shall continue encouraging people to turn out and take this opportunity to tell the world what they want. A yes vote is a vote for self determination which is accepted and encouraged by the UK Government for its Overseas Territories. A yes vote does not rule out further evolution of our constitution which could, at some distant date in the future, culminate in independence, if it became a practical and realistic proposition and was the wish of the people.

A true son of the Falklands

Remembering John Robert Allan

JOHN Robert Allan: a true son of the Falklands was born at 14 Davis Street, to Fred and Mary Allan. John was the elder of two sons. Clive died in 2011.

Growing up in the Falklands was a boy's adventure filled with boundless freedom to enjoy the outdoors, in the hills and mountains, fishing, or messing about on boats in Stanley Harbour. These activities filled John with dreams of bigger adventures beyond his shores.

John was educated in Stanley (1937-47), except for nine months enforced evacuation to Walker Creek together with thirty-five other children in 1942.

Early experiences of Camp life were enhanced by attendance at annual Boys Brigade camps in Berkeley Sound. Joining the Boys Brigade, under the watchful eye of Captain Bill Jones, engendered a different yet challenging sense of freedom as he along with many other lads learned to live off the land, to respect the countryside while promoting its customs and values, and absorbing mother nature's bountiful array of wildlife. Sadly the organisation ended in 1982, but 'old boys' meet annually for dinner each December, honouring fond memories of comradeship and duty.

John relished the opportunity for employment and on leaving school became a Post Officer messenger, transferring later to the Meteorological office until he could steal away to sea on the MV Golden Chance working for the South Atlantic Sealing Company at Albemarle. In January 1952 he embarked on the RRS John Biscoe (1) and went south.

Although family was his first love, his vocational love was the sea, but he was distracted from that, by a blossoming and lasting romance with his dancing partner, Joyce McCarthy, later his wife of 60 years. They were married on May 6, 1953. Their first child David was followed by Marilyn, Rosemarie, Valerie, Terry and Michael, ending dreams of a career at sea.

John's employments included a farmhand at Port Louis, a policeman, a general builder, working alongside his life-long friend John Rowlands and also a chicken farmer. With the arrival of the satellite tracking stations in the 1960s, career enhancement was offered at the Radio Sonde Research Station and subsequently at the European Research Organisation at Moody Brook. John was one of a few Islanders employed in those organisations, and later in life, he worked for ESRO in Darmstadt, Germany.

The mid 1970s were difficult time for Falkland Islanders; threats from Argentina, British Government desires to appease the Argentines through lease back or sovereignty transfer options, caused John to recognise, that he should afford his two youngest sons educational opportunity in the UK, and the family emigrated to Southampton in 1976. Employed as the FIG Secretariat Office Manager, his political instincts convinced him Britain was giving up on his beloved Falklands.

John gave freely of his time to the UK Government intelligence gathering network and undertook, TV and media interviews and worked tirelessly in support of the Falklands in those heady days of 1982; he felt he and other Islanders with him, were doing their bit from afar. He was an active member of the Falkland Islands Committee and later the Falkland Islands Association.

Although he failed to secure a seat on the Legislative Council late in life, John, by inclination, was not drawn to public office, but he revelled in local politics. A natural socialist, he disliked Margaret Thatcher's Government policy toward the Falklands, in the Ridley era, and her capitalist free-market policies. However, when she deployed the Task Force to recover the Falklands, he was full of praise - "she's doing us right".

The Falklands lured John and Joyce back in the 1990's. The couple made their final family home in the historic Jubilee Villas on Ross Road complete with flag pole and flower garden, a favourite stopping off point for tourists. Tea, cakes and a chat with John and Joyce, with a history and politics lesson thrown: a taste of the Falklands! In recent years John devoted time to writing up history; he had three historical booklets published, filling voids in Falklands 20th century history.

John (alias 'Thirsty') was a valued member (later Honorary) of the Falkland Club, who relished debate, delivered in distinct and unambiguous tones of black and white, over a glass or three.

John suffered periods of life-threatening ill-health throughout his life, but despite the water of life often being deeper than his bodily height, John was characteristically determined always to survive. His courage and cheerfulness aided his return home from KEMH for an unforgettable further five weeks as prostate cancer enveloped his final days while comforted by his large family. 'Poppa' John was essentially a family man and proud as punch of his large brood consisting of fourteen grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

John Robert Allan, alias 'Poppa' and 'Thirsty' was born in Port Stanley on November 8, 1932. He died on February 5, 2013, aged 80.

MLAs defend budget at public meeting

MEMBERS of the Legislative Assembly at a public meeting on Monday evening defended their position of not including in the annual budget what they described as 'windfalls' from fishing and oil.

Responding to a demand from a member of the public to justify the Medical Services Tax when £26 million had been added to the Consolidated Fund over the past two financial years, Chair Dick Sawle said the £26 million had arisen from a number of positive budget variances, primarily fishing licences, in excess of projected budgets, of £15M and £17M from oil exploration related tax receipts.

He added, "However, what these mask is an underlying operating deficit over the last two years of £6 million. Government have long maintained a policy of not relying on the volatile revenues from Illex and have used these as 'windfalls' as they are received, rather than use them to support the underlying operating budget."

He said the revenues received from oil exploration had been transferred to a separate part of the Consolidated Fund to be known as the Oil Development Reserve, "effectively an earmarked reserve for planning purposes."

He said the receipts were also non-recurring and could not yet be relied on to continue into the future.

MLA Sawle said: "The Oil Development Reserve is a potential precursor to a formal Sovereign Wealth Fund however the first call on these monies will be to ensure that the required infrastructure and capacity are in place within the Falklands to ensure the further development of oil."

He explained that the government's continued budget policy was to maintain, "at least a balanced budget and as mentioned earlier, recent years show an underlying recurring deficit despite some beneficial windfalls."

He added that the the purpose of the MST was to support the ongoing operating budget: "This continues to be the case and as an example the Health budget increased by 12 per cent over the two year period mentioned."

MLAs Summers, Elsby and Hansen however went on to note their disapproval of the the MST. MLA Summers said he had at the last budget proposed that MST rates be resduced to zero but this had not been accepted and that he would raise the issue again at the next budget.

MLA Elsby commented that the tax hit the poorest paid in the community.

Second best in the world

FALKLAND Conservation's Watch Group have won runners up in the Royal Society for the Protection of Bird's (RSPB) Best Youth Group award. Watch Group Leader Maggie Battersby said their small group were recognised because of the variety of expeditions and activities they did and the effort and enthusiasm of the children.

RSPB certificates and Falkland Conservation medals for each Watch Group member were presented by the HE Governor Haywood at a prize-giving celebration on Saturday.

In her speech Mrs Battersby thanked the volunteers, parents, farmers and landowners for their endless support and the wonderful kids who make the Watch Group such a success. Standard Chartered Bank was also thanked for donating money for many of their trips.

Mobile referendum for sick and elderly

IT was confirmed at the public meeting on Monday that as with previous elections, a mobile team will be visiting KEMH wards, sheltered housing and Yates Place for the referendum.

Member of Legislative Assembly (MLA) Sawle added: "Whether this will happen on the Sunday or the Monday is yet to be decided, but information on these arrangements will be provided in due course and KEMH staff will be reminded the day before the Referendum of the polling arrangements."

Also at the meeting MLAs invited those with uncertainties about the referendum or the referendum question, to make contact with them in order to discuss their concerns or ask questions.

Referendum details

The referendum about whether or not Falkland Islanders wish the Falkland Islands to maintain their current status as an overseas territory of the United Kingdom is now less than 3 weeks away.

The world will be watching the referendum and there will be international observers here to ensure that the referendum is free and fair.

We are making some small but important changes to the way we carry out the referendum to make sure that the process is, and is seen by the world to be, demonstrably fair and open.

To achieve that, the ballot paper will not have any serial number or any individually identifying marks on it; the only mark on it will be the official seal. This ensures there can be no suggestion that voting may be influenced by the possibility, however remote, that a vote could be linked back to the person casting the vote.

Also, to minimise the risk of a person being able to vote more than once, voters will be allocated a polling station (either static or mobile) at which they will be expected to vote (this will be based on the address which they are currently registered at). In practice this will not affect most people, who will simply vote at the place they have always done. However, if the allocated polling station is not a convenient place to vote, the voter can let us know, and arrangements will be made for them to vote at another polling station.

Each voter will be sent a letter which tells you which polling station you have been allocated to vote at. Don't worry if you will not be staying at that address during the referendum and want to vote somewhere else – simply contact the Registry and let the Registrar General know where you will be during the referendum and you will be allocated the most convenient polling station instead.

If, on the day, you cannot get to your allocated polling station – don't worry – you will still be able to vote at any polling station – but there may be a short delay while the polling staff ensure that the allocated polling station knows you have voted.

If you have any questions about the referendum procedures and voting please contact the Registrar General on email at registrargeneral@townhall.gov.fk or telephone 27269.

Goal in sight for next IJS/CE Head Teacher Islander Karen

EVIDENCE of the ongoing success of the Falkland Islands Government 'succession planning' initiative, Islander Karen Steen will take up the post of Head Teacher of the Infant/ Junior School and Camp Education in September this year.

Deputy Head Karen has been mentored over the past two years by the current Head Teacher Tom Hill, who is clearly delighted by Karen's achievement and keen to promote her success and that of the programme.

He said: "I've really enjoyed the training aspect of my role here and with five Middle Leadership candidates now qualified and Karen well on her way to the full Headship qualification; the educational management training we have organised has been a real success for the Islands. Personally and professionally, it's been a real pleasure to have worked with Karen over the last two years, and it's not over yet: I'm here until August."

Tom said he had been continuously impressed with the professionalism and dedication Karen has brought to her current role. He assured: "I know that primary education couldn't be in safer hands for 2013/14 onwards."

Karen told Penguin News that the "end goal" of the Head Teacher post had been identified some time ago and it was a case of, "back-tracking," and identifying what needed to be achieved by her in order to reach that goal.

"Employing Tom was part of that process," said Karen who explained that Tom, as a qualified Head Teacher and a National College facilitator had experience of the required systems and was able to mentor her along the way.

Not mandatory but highly recommended was the National Professional Qualification for Headship, and as such Karen has been following the intense programme which she will have completed in twelve months.

"It's an excellent course," she said and, "covers all areas of headship."

Although she has gained a great deal of experience with her role as Deputy Head as well as time as Acting Head Teacher along the way, she feels the course is, "filling in the gaps."

The majority of the course is online and she is working alongside forty other, "highly motivated people," based in the South West of England. Karen said: "Alongside learning through the course, we learn from each other as part of an online professional forum."

The course is divided into three essential modules and two elective modules. These are facilitated through online courses. They are broken into sections with assignments for each. "Our work is uploaded to the National College website and is accessible by all on the course, so we are able to view progress and learn from each other," said Karen.

Karen became involved in the FIG's Leadership Planning programme in 2011 and joined 15 other professionals for a workshop weekend held at Darwin.

"That was really helpful," she said. "Since then we meet monthly. The group can be used as a think tank for FIG as well as a resource for research and problem solving."

Within the succession planning programme, "I have received a lot of support from David Jenkins as Director of Education, from Hilary McFarland in the Human Resources department and from Tom Hill, who has been instrumental in the process as a facilitator, coach and mentor."

She recommended that Falklands residents with a career goal in mind become involved in the programme, "it's there for local people and includes both funding and support."

She said the availability of considerable financial support had been very much backed by Members of the Legislative Assembly.

Within that remit it offers access to courses and facilitates gaining the qualification needed by the individual in order to work towards the post they desire: "It's a worthwhile scheme and anyone interested should look into it," she said.

"Identifying this goal through performance management is how it started for me."

Karen concluded, "I feel extremely privileged to take up the position of Head Teacher. This is a fabulous school, which reaches across the Islands to our pupils in Camp, and is filled with friendly, successful children who are eager to learn and whose positive energy creates a culture of enjoyment."

She says she is well supported in the role, "through the professionalism and commitment of our teachers, LSAs and administrative staff; the school managers; the Education Board, and the wider Education Dept staff, alongside our parents. Our collective focus on the best outcomes for our children is the glue that makes the partnerships work so well and keeps us driving forwards."

Karen has been Deputy Head for five years, and completed her original teacher training in 1996 at the University College of Ripon and York St John's.

Greenberg: Delivery of clear laws could be speedy

THE accessibility and fitness for purpose of the laws of the Falkland Islands have been a subject for much discussion in recent months. This is not only due to the occasionally outspoken criticism of them by Senior Magistrate Mr Carl Gumsley, but also because of a growing fear that with the advent of the oil industry in production mode will come the spectre of armies of corporate lawyers running expensive rings round us, unless our laws are clear, comprehensive and unambiguous.

Enter Daniel Greenberg, a very experienced barrister whose speciality is legislation in which capacity he advises the Westminster parliament. Mr Greenberg, who was making his first visit to the Falklands this week, has been appointed by the Falkland Islands Government to make recommendations on the best way to move towards the publication of a set of laws which will fill the above criteria.

Since his arrival in the Falklands on Monday February 11, Mr Greenberg has had meetings with the government's lawyers, the Chamber of Commerce, the Human Rights Action Group, lawyers Mark Neves and Keith Watson, the Senior Magistrate, the Governor, the Secretariat and Members of the Legislative Assembly as well as participating in a Public Meeting on Monday night.

Mr Greenberg reports that what he has observed in his brief time here is a willingness on the part of everyone consulted to take the opportunity to put the statute book into good repair and feels that this expressed need for clarity and certainty will enable the Falklands to deal with whatever is coming in the future. This was an appropriate time and a, "fantastic opportunity," said Mr Greenberg, to draw an effective durable line that would support a lot of building. Clearly there were some aspects of the law where there was less certainty than desirable, but the will to improve was there from everybody. He believed also that having relatively small levels of bureaucracy gave the opportunity to move very fast.

While Mr Greenberg was understandably unwilling to divulge the detail of this thinking before making the report to the Attorney General which is expected in May, he did believe that there were some themes emerging which encouraged him to think that the revision of Falkland Islands laws was not undoable and need not be necessarily overlengthy. He believed that some of the techniques he was considering, particularly in relation to the technical aspects of the task, were designed to deliver certainty and clarity in a relatively short time. There was, he believed, a balance to be struck, but he was confident that he had some ideas about how it could be achieved.

Mr Greenberg told Penguin News: "From what I have seen, I am confident that the necessary base for this project for giving clarity and certainty can be achieved within the time frames needed and that progress can be made over months rather than years."

There were resource implications, Mr Greenberg said, but he did not think that it would be responsible of him to urge the spending of millions of pounds, particularly if the result was to be a system which would fall into disuse immediately. He commented: "One of the things that I am grappling most while I am here is towards a system that is inherently durable. There will have to be the commitment of some resources to it, but I like to think that they can be relatively modest and that they can be demonstrably value for money."

Outrageous charge

ALL medical and hospital fees were abolished for entitled patients when Medical Services Levy (MSL) was introduced and replaced the fees in 1979 at a time when the economy based solely on agriculture and the export of wool was stagnating.

MSL and other taxes were abolished on my recommendation in the early 1990s following the establishment of the fisheries regime in 1987 and the successive budget surpluses brought about by high levels of income from licence fees.

They were abolished because more and more money was being added to reserves from the growth in the economy and government no longer needed the revenue from those taxes to balance the budget.

Currently, while those former surpluses are being dwarfed by today's positive budget variances due to revenues from oil related activity (£26m in the past two years and £9m so far this year) the recently introduced Medical Services Tax continues to be imposed.

As well as being subject to this tax, to add insult to injury, patients are now required to pay a £300 flight charge when referred overseas for medical treatment.

What on earth were MLAs thinking about when they approved this new charge just a few months ago without any public consultation.

It's clear that government doesn't need the small amount of income this charge generates to balance the budget since surpluses well in excess are simply being banked. But £300 is a lot of money for some people to find. Surely medical patients who are referred overseas for treatment have enough worries from the diagnosis of their illness or injury, the thought of leaving their families behind and having to cope with travelling and living abroad sometimes for an extended period in a strange place with additional living expenses.

It's not the patient's choice. Due to our remoteness and small economies of scale I have always understood that it is more cost effective and practical for the government to send patients overseas for specialist treatment rather than attempt to equip and staff the hospital here to cope with everything.

What is the real purpose of the charge? Is it a message to make people think twice before going to a doctor if they think they might have an ailment that needs overseas referral? If it's to make a statement what is it?

Perhaps some readers consider the charge to be reasonable but I for one think it's outrageous and would like to see it abolished.

Eyes of the world upon us

AS the big day draws closer there is plenty of workplace discussion on the referendum.

I am a little worried about the amount of independence talk I have been hearing. The eyes of the world (no matter what Argentina thinks) are on us, and most importantly the eyes of Britain are on us and we do not want to make them or ourselves look like fools.

The world's media seems to think this is a referendum on sovereignty, which of course it is not. If, however, you happen to be thinking about independence then your answer to the big question would be NO, you do not want to be a British Overseas Territory.

But if NO gets a lot of votes then the world's media, and the people of Britain will assume NOT that we want to be independent, but that we want to be Argentine.

There is no way this little country is ready or even close to ready for independence, so right now we need a massive turnout on voting day, and a massive YES vote to remain a British Overseas Territory.

This will send a very strong message to the world. One day we may be ready for independence, but it's not today.

How dare he?

THE visit by MLA's Cheek and Sawle to London seems to have been a great success for the Falklands; certainly the press and when many Falkland families had been established here for over eighty years. At that time the then inhabitants of what is now Argentina were busy systematically slaughtering the real owners of the land; it is they who were and are an implanted population. We displaced no original inhabitants.

Kirchner also is only first generation in that her mother was German and her father Spanish; so calling us an implanted people is laughable. The fact is that all of the Americas were taken over by foreign invaders displacing the original owners of the land with the notable exception of the Falklands. The Argentines also make derogatory remarks about some of our representatives in that they have decided to settle here from elsewhere. I think we born Islanders need to make it very clear that anyone who decides to make his or her life here and be loyal to the Falklands is as much a Falkland Islander as the rest of us. We have shown that anyway by electing such people as our Assembly Members.

I believe both Timerman's and Kirchner's fathers were great human rights activists in Argentina; it is a pity their offspring have not inherited such ideas and now seem to be obsessed with removing such rights from Falkland Islanders.

Vote for dedication of the female persuasion

STANDARD Chartered Bank is celebrating International Women's Day on March 8, by inviting nominations for women in the workplace that deserve recognition for their outstanding contribution

A spokesperson for SCB said: "International Women's Day is an opportunity to celebrate the increasing empowerment of women and to recognise the contribution they make to society. Women all over the world still face many barriers including illiteracy, poverty, domestic violence and discrimination. Sadly, 70 per cent of the world's people living in absolute poverty are women, and only one per cent of the world's landowners are women."

THE weather was unusually sunny for the Cape Pembroke half marathon on Sunday and with 61 taking part in the event the day was a triumph despite the ever present wind.

First at Victory Green was Ash Stoby from Hillside, three minutes clear of second place with a time of 1 hour 22 minutes and seven seconds. There was a closely fought battle for second place between Ben Gallagher from MPC 1 hour 25 minutes 20 seconds, and Stanley man Anton Wollaardt just 33 seconds behind him. Anton improved on his time last year, knocking off over three minutes.

Closely following the top ten runners was first lady past the post Rebecca Frostick, with a very good time of 1 hour 38 minutes followed some time later by second and third ladies Carly Yeomans 2 hours 6 minutes and Allana Westermeyer 2 hours 9 minutes.

Storming ahead of the other walkers Sally Ellis claimed the best time of 2 hours 50 minutes.

There were two relay entries this year, with only two runners each the teams did not make it easy for themselves with a ten kilometre leg each.

Kate Stenning and Henry Holmes took first place in a brilliant time of 2 hours and 3 minutes. Callum Boyce and Matthew Hansen put in a valiant time of 2 hours 37 minutes to take second place.

Special commendation must go to young Henry Holmes who went on to finish the whole 13.1 mile course after completing his team leg just to see if he could do it. To reaffirm Stanley Running Club doesn't advocate anyone under the age of 16 running the whole course but they were impressed all the same. Both teams received medals for their efforts donated by Patrick Watts.

Stanley Running Club work hard to hold the event every year in any weather but they would not be able to make it happen with out the generous support of their helpers, sponsors, and of course the runners and walkers who show up on the day. SRC would like to thank the following for their kind sponsorship that helped make the 2013 Half Marathon a success: RBC Ltd, FIC Ltd, Consolidated Fisheries Ltd, Ian Stewart Construction Ltd and Patrick Watts. Also to the marshals and helpers throughout the course and at the finish line; there are too many to list but thank you again for your help with this community event.

Emergency Radio Frequencies

The Public are advised that, in the event of an emergency, where no other form of communication is available, the Royal Falkland Islands Police maintain a 24 hour listening watch on the VHF 2 metre band. This system is served by a series of five repeaters. Users are advised to familiarise themselves with the frequencies that the system uses and which areas of the Falkland Islands they cover, to optimise their likelihood of accessing the system. A listening watch is also maintained on the Marine Band.

VHF 2 Metre Band:

Sapper Hill: Frequency: 146.675 (Simplex) This repeater serves both Mount Kent and Pleasant Peak repeaters and the Stanley area.
Mount Kent: Frequency: 147.125 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north camp on East Falklands and repeats the Mount Caroline Repeater, which covers the north of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.

Pleasant Peak: Frequency: 147.225 (+600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of East Falkland and repeats Mount Alice Repeater, which covers most of the south of West Falklands. It links to Stanley via Sapper Hill.
Mount Alice: Frequency: 147.825 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves most of the south of West Falklands and links to Stanley via Pleasant Peak and Sapper Hill.
Mount Caroline: Frequency: 147.725 (-600 Duplex) This repeater serves the north of West Falklands, including the cross sound ferry main operational area and links to Stanley via Mount Kent and Sapper Hill.
Marine Band: 156.800... Channel 16 (Stanley area) 2.182 MHz HF In the event that communications fail on all the above frequencies then the RFI may be contacted direct on 153.650 (duplex + 1.6). It is however unlikely that this frequency will be functional from West Falkland

Fault Reporting - Users are encouraged to report any faults with the system:

Over the garden fence with Ginge Kidd

THE beetroot in the tunnel has now been pulled, lightly cooked and then sliced and frozen in suitable small containers. We seem to have gone off vinegar so there's no point in pickling it.

The peas, outside, have once again been raided by little two-legged mice, so I will go back to buying them. It's a small price to pay when they are enjoyed so much raw, and so good for them in that state.

Vegetable borders planted up some years ago with hedging, and some other plants to take away the bare look of a new garden, have been ignored for some time. They have become overcrowded with both mature plants, mainly crocosmias, lupins and red hot pokers and of course also with masses of weeds, mainly Yorkshire fog, which is always happy to colonise any bit of ground it can find. Like all our worst garden weeds it is as big a pest and as persistent too as our neighbours across the water.

Bill has been getting to grips with a lot of this mess, and we now look presentable again.

The three grape plants we have are a bit 'keen' and just covered in bunches of grapes. I have just finished removing some of the bunches to give the rest a chance. After all, none of the plants is a metre tall yet. I look forward to seeing what we might end up with this year.

I've had a bit of a bad back and hips since I last wrote and that was followed by a 'bit' of a cough and snuffle so I was generally lacking in 'oomph'. Sitting on a little stool with a pannikin in hand picking red currants just about suited my mood, nothing too strenuous. It took me back many years to sitting in a similar fashion milking cows. How I disliked those animals, but, I do miss the fresh, or scalded, milk (with it's delicious clotted cream the day after). It's such a far cry from the boxed and (to me anyway) rather grotty tasting UHT milk, although I find that okay in tea and coffee.

Of course, many other good things came with fresh milk, like fresh cream, put through a hand-driven 'separator' (if you got the speed wrong you ended up with very thick or very thin cream) the butter salted and saved, the cheese too. Fortunately now, every Tuesday my jar of cream gets deposited at the door by Lisa - delicious! Sometimes there is even enough left over to make a small pat of butter. Sadly, few of today's children realise that milk does not come directly from a box on a shop shelf.

In an ideal world every flowering plant would benefit from having its spent flowers removed, especially the annuals as their only purpose in life is to flower and set seed in the same season and then die. By 'dead-heading' they will flower for longer. It is also good to dead-head perennial plants but in our case, at the moment anyway, one of us would have to set up residence amongst them to deal with them all, and so I compromise by just cutting or breaking off any I come across. The long and unsightly stems of such plants as lupins and perennial poppies will fill out from the bottom again and might give another show later.

Gentians are among my list of favourite plants; the gorgeous blues they flower in show how they got their name. I'm also fond of Veronicas and so, when I saw seeds for a Veronica gentianoides I thought I was on to a winner. And I was; they are wonderful plants, and they are at the front of one of the borders.

The problem is the catalogue gave their height as six to eight inches, but they didn't mention that their flowering spikes would make them two foot tall! Never mind, the flower beds are looking rather nice really, and have filled out quite well; the lilies are flowering in all colours, the crocosmias in shades of red and orange. Hardy gladiolus nanus so much smaller and less stiff than their taller sisters are gorgeous and so are the galtonias (Summer hyacinths) The hardy geraniums, heucheras and hostas have become sizeable plants and the lewisias are absolutely covered in flowers.

So many tourists stop and take photos on their way to the Museum that we are often tempted to open a café (weather permitting) for them. It really is lovely to see the enjoyment they derive from the garden. I guess that after all the journalists have had to say about these 'bleak, bare' islands over the years, all the gardens and trees here must come as a bit of a surprise. Most of them stop for a natter so it's got to be good for public relations too.

Many tourists have commented on the lack of facilities for pram and wheelchair users using Ross Road West. Sadly the 1914/18 Monument 'hill' does not seem to ever feature in the plans for tourism, and it is difficult for those in wheelchairs or pushing a pram to negotiate a way off the sea-wall on the North side of the road, impossible for them to use the steps and, there just isn't a pavement wide enough on the South side either. Just cutting the gorse back another three feet on that side would allow them the wider pavement needed to travel safely and would certainly improve the visibility for all drivers.

At the moment that bit of road is just an accident waiting to happen.

Running Club 10K Sunday

THIS Sunday, February 24, Stanley Running Club will be holding a 10 kilometre race starting at Stanley Leisure Centre.

Please check-in at 9.45am for a 10am start. The minimum age to enter is 12 years old and there is a £5 entry fee that will go towards fundraising to send athletes to the Small Island Games.

Enter on the day or in advance to: ros.sparky@horizon.co.fk

THE Ian Stewart Trophy attracted 21 golfers all looking to add their name to one of the nicest annual trophies contested. Bright sun and a cool wind from the west made for fair playing conditions.

Most golfers managed to return scores near to their handicaps and eight players posted fine scores of 35 points or better.

Four players tied at the top on 37 points with Rodney Lee's superb back nine of 23 points settling the deadlock and securing a popular win. Glenn Ross claimed second just ahead of Martyn Gillsion-Clarke each with good back nine scores of 21 points. Gordon Lennie scored 20 of his 37 points on the front nine and settled for fourth place. The best back nine prize went to Roy Smith on 20 points. Gordon collected the prize for the best outward half. Nearest the pins went to a fine Wayne Clement shot on the 17th and Eugene Hurley won the practice green shoot-out for the other nearest the pin prize.

There are of course many mysteries that trouble golfers, the occasional lost ball which was last seen bounding along the fairway, failure to be sensible and play safe, and the possible whereabouts of a certain Lord Lucan, but perhaps none will confound golfers down the ages more than our club Captain announcing, "and the longest drive on the 14th goes to Bob Gilbert."

We thank all at Ian Stewart Construction for sponsoring this excellent event.

In other news, former Club Captain and Secretary Tony Rocke who left the Islands last July has qualified as a tournament referee after passing the Royal and Ancient Golf Club's Rules exam. Tony attended a three day Tournament Administrators and Referees School in St Andrews in February. The school was attended by 72 golfers drawn from around the world and included role play sessions led by a senior European tour referee. Tony's first assignment will be the All Africa Junior Team Golf Challenge to be held in Mauritius in April.

Meanwhile, the top half of the Club Matchplay championship has progressed well and Sarah Bowles has made the final of this honours board event for the third year in a row, defeating Declan Bonner 2&1 in a hard fought semi-final.

Next week is the Alex Smith Trophy sponsored by the Overseas Games Association. Players are asked to sign in by 0900 for a 0915 hrs tee-off.

This is an award presented to under 18's who the committee believe have shown the most improvement in score, attendance and character. Tamsin has shown continuing efforts in her shooting and the award was well deserved.

In other Archery news our fundraiser cake sale last Saturday morning raised £348.31.

Thank you to those members who donated baking but to those who gave up their Saturday morning.

Special mention to Rowena, Gaye and Anna for their time in the kitchen and donations of home baking.

To Colleen at the Library and my special granddaughter Alicia who was so brave. Sorry we didn't get your library books that day. To Lisa and Dennis of casualty and those hunky firemen who all kept up the humour while doing deep breathing exercises carrying me down those stairs. You'll be pleased to know that I am on a diet. To all the medical staff who took such good care of me that day and after I got back home from Chile. A big thank you also to the staff of Clinica Alemana who put me together again and nurse Pablo who escorted me back home. I wouldn't have managed it without you. We have been overwhelmed by all the lovely floral tributes and the many messages, cards, letters and words of comfort from far and wide. We want to say 'thank you' to the staff of the hospital for their help in so many ways, with special thanks to Dr Christine Bradshaw who has been a tower of strength and Rachel Williamson and her team for their cheerful daily visits, the Reverend Richard Hines for all his help and the many close friends and family who dropped in to chat to John and give us help and support. The United Nations, Self-Determination and the Falkland Islands
A Public Meeting on Friday 8 March 2013 at 5.00 pm Chamber of Commerce Meeting Room, West Hillside, Stanley

Speaker: Peter Willets
Emeritus Professor of Global Politics, City University, London
Chair: Hon. Dick Sawle, MLA
Professor Willets will argue that self-determination cannot just be treated as a common sense idea. Since 1960, it has become a technical term in international law that implies a choice between three options. The UN call for the UK and Argentina to negotiate does not mean the right of the Falkland Islanders to self-determination has been denied.
